Oracion's triumph thrills Palace, Lucban residents

WHEN LEO ORACION'S NEIGHBORS IN Lucban, Quezon, heard that he had reached the summit of Mt. Everest, they broke into applause.

"This is a big honor for Lucban," Peter Oracion, a brother of Leo's, said in Filipino over GMA 7's early evening newscast. "Of all the people in our town, only he had the inner strength to climb Everest."

Feast of crispy pata, lechon awaits Everest conquerors

By Christian V. Esguerra

EVERY DISH THEY MISSED IN SCALING THE world's tallest mountain they will find on the table when they get home.

Nothing short of a feast is being prepared for Leo Oracion and Erwin "Pastor" Emata by their colleagues in the First Philippine Mt. Everest Expedition (FPMEE). There will be crispy pata, lechon, shawarma, and, of course, hugs.

32-year-old Leo Oracion reaches Everest summit

By Alcuin Papa

TRIUMPH AND DEEP EMOTION MARKED THE announcement yesterday of triathlete Leo Oracion that he had made it to the summit of Mt. Everest.

"The Philippine eagle has landed," was the radio message of the first Filipino to set foot on the roof of the world, according to Regie Pablo, team leader of the First Philippine Mt. Everest Expedition (FPMEE), of which Oracion is a member.

The 32-year-old Oracion reached the summit at 3:30 p.m.

(5:30 p.m. Philippine time), Pablo said, citing information relayed in a phone call by the FPMEE's Arturo Valdez, who is at the Everest Base Camp (5,400 meters or 17,700 feet).

The adventure racer and lead climber for the FPMEE would have reached the peak earlier in the day but was reportedly bogged down by "traffic" on the trail.

He was among a 30-member team composed of Swiss, Korean and American mountaineers as well as Sherpas, indigenous people who serve as guides and climbing partners.

The team was slowed down considerably upon reaching the Hillary Step, a 40-foot wall of rock around an hour to the summit.

"This is a big accomplishment for a country at sea level," Pablo told the INQUIRER just after he got the news.

"We have no experience with alpine conditions; this is alien to us. It's like putting a Filipino on the moon. We also showed the other expeditions our positive values and outlook on things," he said.

Pablo also said Oracion's feat would put the Philippines on the international mountaineering map: "It's a boost to the reputa-

Gov't posts rare budget surplus in April

By Michelle V. Remo

THE GOVERNMENT POSTED A rare budget surplus in April, five times higher than the surplus posted a year earlier, as lower expenditures made up for weaker-than-expected income tax revenues.

Finance Secretary Margarito Teves yesterday said the government had a budget surplus of P17.6 billion in April, with revenues reaching P95 billion and expenditures amounting to P77.4 billion.

The budget surplus in the same month last year amounted to P3.3 billion.

Teves said the P50-billion budget deficit for the first four months was also below the shortfall of P60.1 billion a year earlier, putting the government on track in meeting its budget deficit target of P125 billion compared to last year's P146.8 billion.

The surplus boosted Philippine dollar bonds, with bonds due in 2031 and 2036 rising three-eighths of a point on expectations of sustained improvements in the

As chapel bells ring, Albay villagers 'evacuate'

STO. DOMINGO, ALBAY—CHAPEL bells rang at around 5:45 a.m. yesterday, sending dozens of villagers, including invalid elders and toddlers borne on their fathers' shoulders, rushing out of their huts to high ground in Barangay Buhatan here.

The mock tsunami warning also set off alarms from Guam to Singapore as two dozen Pacific Rim nations held an unprecedented drill organized after Asia's monster tsunami of 2004.

The massive drill, dubbed the "Exervice Pacific Wave 2006," was conducted over two days that saw several real earthquakes hit the region, including one north of New Zealand that triggered a re-

Opus Dei in RP: It began with 3 Harvard boys

By Ma. Ceres P. Doyo

(First of two parts)

JESUS ESTANISLAO WAS PURSUING a doctorate degree in economics at Harvard University in 1961 when he met a group of Filipinos raising funds for a chapel of Opus Dei close to the university in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

"I thought I should do my part," narrates Dr. Estanislao, 66, noted economist and former finance secretary in the Corason Aquino administration. An Opus Dei numerary, Estanislao had served as Opus Dei regional director for Asia.

"Then a priest of the Opus Dei assigned there—Fr. Alfonse Lecomte Genoa—told me that it was not I who would do the work." In other words, it was God who was going to do the work through the worker.

"It was the first time it was said to me that way," recalls Estanislao. That was how he began to understand Opus Dei ("God's work" in Latin) and what this institution within the Catholic Church was all about.

Estanislao wasn't in a spiritual search mode at that time. He had studied in Catholic universities—the Divine Word Missionaries' San Carlos University in Cebu for college and the Jesuits' Fordham University in New York for his master's. Priesthood or membership in a religious group was never in his

SC chief: We uphold civil liberties vs gov't action

By Armand N. Nocum

CHIEF JUSTICE ARTEMIO PANGANIBAN yesterday said that the Supreme Court was asserting its independence when it struck down as unconstitutional acts of President Macapagal-Arroyo regarded as inimical to civil liberties.

In a speech before graduate students of the Georgetown Law

Center in Washington, Panganiban said that the court's recent decisions affirmed its commitment to "safeguard the liberty of our people and to nurture their prosperity, while upholding the rule of law and the independence of the judiciary."

Panganiban referred to "landmark" rulings on petitions assailing Executive Order No. 464 banning officials from congressional inquiries, the Calibrated Preemptive Response (CPR) policy against demonstrators and Presidential Proclamation No. 1017 that placed the country under a weeklong state of emergency in February.

"In all these cases, the Supreme Court upheld the primacy of civil liberties over governmental actions," Panganiban said.

He stressed that any move to suppress the rights of Filipinos in exchange for economic progress would not succeed. "Filipinos may endure occasional hunger, but they will never tolerate injustice and indignity for long."

He said this was the reason President Ferdinand Marcos' martial law regime failed to produce long-term economic progress.

Panganiban also said that unlike its foreign counterparts, the Philippine court cannot adopt the "view that courts exist in a vacuum," given the "stark realities of poverty in our country."

Thus, he said, the Philippine judiciary must work hard at contributing to the country's prosperity. Panganiban said liberty and

Cha-cha foes unfazed by dialogue

By TJ Burgonio

THE NEWLY ORGANIZED STOP Cha-cha coalition says it is not daunted by the agreement of the Senate and House of Representatives to discuss constitutional reform, and it is determined to mount more road shows and file more cases in court to derail any move to amend the Constitution while President Macapagal-Arroyo is in power.

Members of the coalition are also confident that the senators would not bend over backwards and agree to sit with the administration-dominated House in a constituent assembly to amend the 1987 Charter.

By agreeing to the dialogue, the Senate was merely performing its role in the system of checks and balances, former Social Welfare Secretary Corazon "Dinky" Soliman said yesterday.

"I think that the Senate is being true to its mandate of making democratic institutions work, defying what Malacañang is doing, which is to corrupt all democratic institutions," she said at a public forum in Makati.

"It is Malacañang that is in a panic because their plans are not coming to fruition as promised by their operators," she added.

Soliman, together with nine resigned Cabinet colleagues, is a member of the Black & White Movement which is part of the STOP (Sa Tamang Oras at Paraan) Cha-cha coalition that includes people like former President Corason Aquino, former Vice President Teofisto Guingona, Senate President Franklin Drilon and other political, business and youth leaders.

Senators and congressmen agreed to the dialogue in last Tuesday's meeting of the Legislative-Executive Development Advisory Committee called by Ms Arroyo to discuss priority measures.

House Majority Leader Prospero Nograles said yesterday that the Lower House would not insist on the two chambers voting as one in a constituent assembly if they agreed beforehand on what constitutional amendments to adopt.

"If they agree to amend the Constitution, why not?" Nograles said in an interview. "What is important is the finished product. We could do it whether voting separately or jointly as long as it's a done deal."

"As soon as we can reach an agreement on which provisions would be revised, it will now be easier to determine if we move forward with the Cha-cha through Constituent Assembly, which is favored by most congressmen, or through a Constitutional Convention, which is preferred by the Senate," Nograles added.

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said the President was "gladdened" by the development.

"As the Senate and the House leaderships prepare for talks, we are hopeful that they will find a middle ground to move forward Charter change," Bunye said in a statement.

At yesterday's STOP Cha-cha forum, Drilon allayed fears that the Senate had softened up on its stand that both chambers must vote separately.

"Contrary to the spin, nothing happened yesterday except an agreement that our chairs on constitutional amendments will sit down today and talk. Nothing else has changed," Drilon said.

"All this talk about the Constitution being amended by July 2007 is all part of propaganda. It's quite obvious that it will not happen," he added.

Former Sen. Vicente "Ting" Paterno said he believed it was necessary for the Senate to go to the dialogue "so that they will not be seen as intransigent." But he warned the Senate against involvement in a constituent assembly as it would be suspect and lose credibility.

Soliman said the anti-Cha-cha coalition would press ahead with its community-based forums in the countryside to explain the truth behind the administration's attempt to amend the Constitution via a constituent assembly or people's initiative.

The group is holding a program, dubbed "Tango"—for "Tanggaling Muna si Gloria Bago mag Cha-cha"—in front of the Commission on Elections at around 3 p.m. today.

Makati Mayor Jejomar Binay, head of the coalition's legal task force, said the group was preparing to file more cases before courts in Caloocan, Makati, Pasig and Quezon cities, and Manila to stop the Comelec from verifying signatures in the administration-orchestrated people's initiative. *With reports from Philip C. Senators propose amendments to rules on inquiries

By Juliet Labog-Javellana

A DAY AFTER SENATORS ATTENDED a meeting in Malacañang, some of them yesterday sought to amend the Senate rules governing inquiries in aid of legislation supposedly to encourage witnesses to appear in its hearings.

Senate Majority Leader Francis Pangilinan, chair of the Senate rules committee, said the revision of the rules on Senate inquiries would hopefully "lead to better cooperation between the Senate and the executive department."

The proposed amendments would undoubtedly please Malacañang, which has branded the hearings as "in aid of destabilization" and sought to derail them by issuing Executive Order 464.

Pangilinan and Senators Ralph Recto, Manuel "Mar" Roxas II and Pia Cayetano filed Senate Resolution 482 despite an earlier Supreme Court ruling declaring as unconstitutional parts of EO 464 particularly those barring government officials from appearing in congressional hearings without the President's consent. Malacañang has said it would seek a reconsideration of the SC ruling.

In their resolution, the four senators proposed the addition of six provisions, which are intended to "rights of a person appearing in or affected" by the Senate inquiries.

Advance copy

The new provisions include requiring a potential witness to submit his or her written testimony three days in advance, the hiring of a lawyer who shall help the committee screen the testimony, the holding of executive sessions for confidential matters, and giving a person to be mentioned by a witness the opportunity to testify to answer allegations against him or her.

"My fellow senators and I are proposing amendments ... in hopes of assuring witnesses that their rights will be respected and to encourage them to appear before Senate investigations in aid of legislation," Pangilinan said.

He said the new provisions were meant to address the concerns of persons appearing in the Senate, including government officials, that their rights will be respected as mandated by the Constitution.

"These proposed amendments would also ensure that the cooperation of witnesses would not lead to their rights being prejudiced. We hope this too may lead to better cooperation between the Senate and the executive department," Pangilinan said.

New rules

The new rules are:

- Every investigation shall specify the laws, orders, rules that will be reviewed
- The rights of a witness appearing in or affected by an inquiry shall be respected
- Every witness intending or invited to appear before an investigation shall submit a written statement of his/her testimony at least three days before the scheduled appearance unless the majority of the members of the committee determines the urgency of one's testimony in which case the witness will be excused from this requirement.

This requirement for an advance copy of a testimony has been raised by pro-administration senators during the controversial Senate "jueteng" investigation where members of the President's family were implicated.

- Holding of an executive session when: matters concern national security or committee procedure; when testimony will tend to charge an individual with crime or misconduct, to disgrace or injure professional standing of an individual, or expose him or her to public contempt and violate his or her right to privacy; when testimony will disclose the identity of an informer or law enforcer.

- The committee shall hire a lawyer to "assist the committee in evaluating the testimony of the witness and in distinguishing between admissible and inadmissible testimony."

- Giving a right to the implicated person to file a sworn statement or personally appear to testify or submit questions in writing that would be used for the cross-examination of the witnesses.

Gonzalez fires back at Cuenco

By Armand N. Nocum

JUSTICE SECRETARY Raul Gonzalez yesterday dared Cebu Rep. Antonio Cuenco to join the Batasan 5 as part of their legal team even as he denied accusations that the Department of Justice is dictated by a Marcosian thinking.

"You may have the Marcosian thinking in your head because you cooperated with Marcos from Day 1 of Martial Law. We can compare our records during Martial Law and see who was dancing to the Marcosian music, which I never did," said Gonzalez, a human rights lawyer during the Marcos years, in a letter to Cuenco.

Gonzalez was reacting to statements from Cuenco for the President not to listen to sycophants like Gonzalez who figure in legal entanglements like the pursuit of five party-list congressmen accused of rebellion. Cuenco said such moves only work against efforts to unite those in government.

Gonzalez said he could not understand why Cuenco cannot see the need for the DOJ to go after those out to bring the government down.

No permanent chief of NBI yet; Mantaring is acting director

By Christine O. Avendaño

FIVE MONTHS AFTER THE DEATH of Reynaldo Wycoco, Malacañang has yet to come up with his permanent replacement as head of the National Bureau of Investigation.

This after Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita announced yesterday that from being officer in charge of the NBI, Nestor Mantaring was designated as its acting director.

President Macapagal-Arroyo appointed Mantaring last April 19 and his appointment paper was released last April 28.

Wycoco succumbed to a stroke in December last year.

In his weekly news conference, Ermita also announced the appointment of five other officials to various positions. They were appointed to these positions by the President from May 3 to 4.

These were former Philippine National Police chief Roberto

Lastimoso who was appointed as Director 5 of the Metro Rail Transit Line 3; Josefina Santos as acting member of the Board of Pardons and Parole; Federico Puno as member of the Board of Directors of the Manila Electric Com-

Strategy

A second FPMEE climber, Erwin "Pastor" Emata, also 32, was expected to launch his own climb to the peak last night in the company of four climbers from Mallorca in Spain and their Nepalese guides, Valdez said.

He was expected to reach the summit today.

Pablo said the team split up Oracion and Emata as part of its "strategy"—"Just in case the weather turns bad, there is a climber on standby."

From the team's account, Oracion started off from Camp 4, the final way station at the rarefied air of 26,000 feet, on Tuesday night, and had been climbing since.

He had to fight off exhaustion, the thin air, and the cold (sometimes dropping to as low as -60 degrees Celsius) to reach the peak.

Oracion brought with him an oxygen tank, water and some personal effects, including a crayon drawing of the Philippine flag by his 5-year-old daughter.

Dream come true

In an interview aired over ABS-CBN, a principal sponsor of Oracion's climb, an emotional Valdez said a Filipino on top of Everest was for him "a dream come true."

"We showed the whole world that if we [get] our act together we can accomplish anything. Indeed, the Filipino can do it," Valdez said.

Pablo was full of praise for his teammate who, he said, climbed from Camps 3 to 4 without the aid of oxygen tanks.

"Leo is methodical with the things he does. He is a good person and he takes very good care of his teammates. He knows what he is doing, and his Sherpa is experienced," Pablo said.

Oracion was expected to reach Camp 3 last night, and to make the trek down for around eight hours today to reach Base Camp.

Next year, the whole FPMEE is scheduled to climb Everest (29,028 feet, or 8,848 meters) through the North and South routes.

Some will be chosen as climbers; the rest will serve as support teams.

Team members Pablo, Karina Davondon, Larry Honoridez, Janet Belarmino and Noelle Wenceslao were at the National Sports Grille in Greenbelt, Makati City, for a press conference when they heard the news of Oracion's feat.

When Pablo heard confirmation from Valdez, the team members erupted into shouts of joy. Shortly afterward, they gathered to say a quick prayer for the safety of Oracion on his descent and of Emata on his own assault.

"We have overcome every obstacle in our struggle. We thank those who supported us with their prayers," Honoridez told reporters at the venue.

Garduce

Oracion and Emata arrived at the Everest Base Camp on April 15. By then, rival climber Romi Garduce had been preparing for his own attempt to become the first Filipino to plant the national flag at the summit.

Garduce, 37, who had arrived at the Base Camp late in March, is due to reach the summit tomorrow, according to his principal sponsor, GMA 7. With an AFP report

"They must have missed Filipino food so much during their stay at Mt. Everest, so we'll make sure that their stomachs will be full once they get back," said Carina Dayondon, who, along with Janet Belarmino and Noelle Wenceslao, spoke with the INQUIRER while awaiting news from the mountain yesterday.

Dayondon, Belarmino and Wenceslao, the only women in the 17-member FPMEE, were beaming with pride at the prospect that two of their fellow climbers were soon to reach the peak of Everest. (Oracion made it to the top yesterday, with Emata not too far behind.)

success is measured when at least one member gets the job done, Belarmino explained.

Next year, the three women are scheduled to follow Oracion and Emata's lead. They are to leave tomorrow for an expedition in Alaska as part of their preparations.

Funniest

Wenceslao said the experience and triumph of their two colleagues would be invaluable in their effort to achieve a similar feat.

"They are two of the strongest members of our team, and we look up to them for inspiration and encouragement," she said.

And the funniest, too, the women said.

ORACION: Eagle has landed

EMATA: Expected to reach summit today

"Their humor kept us alive during our treks," Dayondon said, recalling an instance when Emata showed up wearing a traffic aide's vest and knee-high socks.

But when it came to climbing mountains, Oracion and Emata were all business, and acted as big brothers to other members of the team.

Dayondon said the two mountaineers often stayed at the end of the line, encouraging disheartened climbers to go on and even carrying part of their load, and making sure that no one would be left behind.

Not impossible

Dayondon said the physical and mental strength of Oracion and Emata had long convinced their teammates that reaching the top of Everest would not be an impossible task for the two men.

"The capability is there. It's only the weather that will spell the difference," Wenceslao said.

The women got to know Oracion and Emata when they began training with the FPMEE in 2004.

In March, the five of them joined the Philippine Coast Guard as draftees for its quick-reaction and search-and-rescue missions.

"They will be a great asset to the organization," Lt. Commander Joseph Coyne, PCG spokesperson, told the INQUIRER.

Their compensation? The opportunity to rescue people in distress, and monthly pay ranging from P3,000 to P9,000.

swimming, cycling and basketball, Peter said. He was in high school when he started climbing mountains.

"He would climb Mt. Banahaw over and over by himself," Peter said. "He would also jump backwards from Arko Bridge, but with a harness."

Family members were surprised at the huge undertaking that Leo's climb had become. But they said they had no doubt that he had the capability to make it.

Said Loretta Oracion of her elder brother: "Of course, all of us are very happy. We're so proud of my kuya because he has realized his dream. Even as a child, he wanted to climb mountains. He is always after adventure."

Loretta said the family was planning a reunion, perhaps even a small party, for her brother.

Also reportedly being planned were a special welcome by the Sangguniang Bayan and a motorcade for Lucban's native son.

Palace rejoicing

Early yesterday, with Oracion's feat yet to be confirmed, Malacañang could not contain its excitement and sent congratulations to him and Erwin "Pastor" Emata.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita told reporters that the expected success of the two climbers showed "the indomitable spirit of ... men, especially if they're Filipinos."

"We're equal to anyone in the world," Ermita said, adding that the Palace was "rejoic[ing]" that they're accomplishing this feat.

"You can imagine how the world will be looking at Filipinos being able to plant the Philippine flag on top of Mt. Everest," Ermita said. "We are proud of [them]."

Asked whether Malacañang would roll out the red carpet for the climbers, Ermita said he was "sure" they would be invited by President Macapagal-Arroyo, especially because she wanted Filipinos to take pride in the achievements of others.

Nervous

In Davao City, Pastor Emata's wife Mary Ann said she and the rest of the family were feeling nervous as he approached the summit of one of the world's most dangerous mountains.

Mary Ann said that while she and the family knew Pastor to be a seasoned mountain climber, they could not avoid worrying about his safety and that of the other members of the First Philippine Mt. Everest Expedition.

"We ask you to pray for their safety. Let us pray that their climb would be successful," she told the INQUIRER yesterday.

Mary Ann said she last spoke with her husband on Saturday: "He told me he was missing me and the children."

The Ematas have two children and live in Tagum City some 60 kilometers north of Davao.

Mary Ann quoted her husband as saying that he and the other climbers were fine.

"They will rest a little upon arriving at Camp 4, and start climbing again [Wednesday] evening," she said.

'Mama's boy'

By his wife's account, Pastor (nicknamed thus because of his religious bent) has been climbing mountains since he was 13—a passion that intensified in 1995 when his mother passed away.

"He was deeply hurt by his mother's death. His passion even became more intense because of that, so he climbed Mt. Apo and stayed there for two weeks," Mary Ann said.

She described him as a "Mama's boy."

Pastor completed a tourism and travel management course at the Mindanao Aeronautical Technical School in Davao City.

He is employed as a tourist guide and usually accompanies researchers. He is also a member of the Davao-based Sandawa Mt. Apo mountaineering club.

Rey Sumagaysay, a close friend and fellow climber in Davao, said Pastor had asked him during their most recent conversation to prepare a roast pig for his homecoming celebration.

He said he was not expecting Pastor to make good on the promise to become one of the first Filipinos to reach the summit of Everest.

"I told him to just plant our flag once he gets there," Sumagaysay said.

Under contract

In Bataan, the family of yet another mountaineer, Romi Garduce, is praying for God's providence to keep him safe and help him realize his dream of reaching the summit.

Romi's niece, Ella, said family members were gathering regularly for prayers. "We're behind him. We pray a lot, offer Masses and novenas," she said in a phone interview from the family home in Barangay Tinajero in Balanga City.

Citing an exclusive contract with GMA 7, family members declined to talk about how they were feeling about Romi's climb.

Romi, the Philippines' "highest altitude record holder," left Everest Base Camp on Sunday and was expected to reach Camp 3 yesterday or today.

He was expected to reach Camp 4 after another day of trekking. From there, he will make his final climb to the peak.

Some analysts saw the surplus as a sign that fiscal reforms—including the implementation of the 12-percent expanded value-added tax (VAT) in February—were taking hold in the Philippines, Asia's largest issuer of sovereign debt after Japan.

The unimpressed

But not everyone was impressed with the latest numbers. "The details were less than stellar—with the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) undershooting its revenue target for April by around 10 percent," said Sin Beng Ong, economist at JP Morgan Chase.

Expenditures in April shrank 7 percent to P77.4 billion while spending in the first four months of the year ballooned 10 percent to P350 billion as the government coughed up money for the construction of bridges, schools and roads after years of scrimping.

Government expenditures were expected to rise in May and June as the government planned to accelerate capital investment before the rainy season sets in.

More work needed

"The surplus was aided by lower expenditures. But since we expect cash disbursements to be higher in May and June, we have to work on the revenue side if we want to stay on track of the fiscal target for the full year," Teves said in a press conference.

The BIR, which accounts for two-thirds to three-fourths of government revenues, collected P71.4 billion in April against its target of P78.6 billion.

Teves said income tax payments in April of P48.5 billion were 15 percent below target as large companies used their existing tax credits against their tax payments, resulting in lower cash collections. (Related story on Business, Page B1.)

"It's really in the income tax that we had a setback," Teves said. "The challenge on the revenue side is to make sure we don't have the same kind of difficulty as we had in April."

In April, VAT collections amounted to only P10.98 billion, slightly lower than the BIR target of P11.4 billion.

The government is banking on extra revenues of about P75 billion a year from the 12-percent VAT.

Teves said the Bureau of Customs (BOC), which collects tariffs on imports, collected P16.3 billion, slightly lower than its P16.51-billion target for the month.

Customs Commissioner Napoleon Morales, however, disputed the figures of the finance department, saying the bureau actually collected P16.58 billion. Morales said the BOC and the DOF would be reconciling the collection figures.

The Bureau of the Treasury, which collects dividends from state-owned firms, collected P4.8 billion during the month, slightly higher than its P4.7-billion target.

Target too high

The BIR wants the finance department to lower the bureau's revenue goal of P675 billion this year, up 26 percent from 2005, saying the target may be too high.

The BOC is also seeking a lowering of its collection target this year, saying the government's decision to reduce oil tariffs, which is estimated to result in foregone revenues of as much as P5.2 billion, should result in a corresponding decrease in its collection target.

But Teves insisted the goals were "realistic and attainable."

He added the government would not change the combined revenue target of P872 billion—up 29 percent from 2005—for the BIR and Bureau of Customs this year.

The government, which is fighting corruption, evasion and weak implementation of tax laws, wants to cut this year's budget deficit to P125 billion, or 2.1 percent of gross domestic product from P146.5 billion, or 2.7 percent of GDP, in 2005.

In 2005, the government, which spends about a third of its budget on interest payments for about $76 billion in foreign and domestic debt, had budget surpluses in April, June and August.

1,300 soldiers set to evict ex-Navy officers

By Dona Pazzibugan

THE PHILIPPINE NAVY HAS FORMED a 1,300-strong team to evict over 50 retired Navy and Marine senior officers from their quarters in Fort Bonifacio this Saturday.

In a show of force, 100 junior officers and 1,200 soldiers assembled yesterday at the Marine Headquarters grandstand, a stone's throw away from the disputed Bonifacio Naval Station (BNS) quarters.

"They should be ashamed of themselves. Where is their shame?" Task Force "Balik-Bahay" commander, Marine Lt. Col. Gioxan Dammang told the troops in a "pep talk."

The retired officers showed no sign of leaving their individual quarters inside the BNS which they have claimed for their own in the past 15 years.

They maintained they have legally acquired the 20-hectare lot through a title issued in 1992 to their group, the Naval Officers Village Association Inc. (NOVAI).

While the case is pending in court, past Navy leaderships have allowed these retired officers to stay on, much to the frustration of senior officers still in active duty who were entitled to the quarters.

Three former Navy chiefs, Vice Admirals Ernesto de Leon, Victorino Hingco and Mariano Dumancas even continued to use their quarters long after they have retired.

De Leon retired in 2005, Hingco in 2003 and Dumancas in 1994.

Last Friday, the Navy served a "final notice of eviction" to 56 of the nearly overstaying officers. They were given until Saturday to leave their quarters.

De Leon and Hingco and retired Rear Admiral Octavio Daus have sent word to the Navy leadership they would move out before the deadline.

D-Day for eviction

"Saturday is our D-Day for the eviction. I don't care (if they resist eviction). We will follow orders," said Dammang, who liberally used cuss words in his pep talk.

No ranking Navy or Marine officials were around at the troop formation, except for Navy spokesman Capt. Geronimo Malabanan and Marine spokesman Lt. Col. Ariel Caculitan.

Malabanan said the task force was given a total of 40 M35 trucks, forklifts, and payloaders to do its job. "We will not extend the deadline unless they secure a (court) order," he said.

One of those to be evicted, retired Rear Admiral Pio Garrido Jr. told reporters he would not leave his quarters.

He appealed to President Macapagal-Arroyo to stop the eviction, as he invoked a proclamation issued by her father, the late president Diosdado Macapagal in 1965 that declared areas of the Fort Bonifacio military reservation as housing sites.

The NOVAI acquired a land title to the BNS officers' quarters in 1992 on the basis of Macapagal's Proclamation 461. In 1994, the NOVAI secured an injunction from the Court of Appeals against their eviction.

"We will not leave on Saturday... We are very afraid and anxious because more than one thousand soldiers are following illegal orders," said Garrido, who spoke to reporters outside his quarters.

Other ranking officials who face eviction are former Marine commandants Lt. Gen. Edgardo Espinosa and Emmanuel Teodosio; Rear Admiral Napoloen Baylon, Eriberto Varona, Manuel de Leon and Guerrero de Guzman and Maj. Gen. Guillermo Ruiz.

The Navy said the overstaying officers have also piled up P7 million in unpaid electricity and water bills. Those with the highest debts are retired Commodore Julito Casillan with P212,626, Commodore Rene Leandro Ebro with P154,502 and Espinosa with P132,810.

DE CASTRO

Noli assures cardinal of gov't assistance for rail squatters

By Cynthia D. Balana

VICE PRESIDENT NOLI DE CASTRO yesterday assured Manila Archbishop Gaudencio Cardinal Rosales of an "in-city resettlement and beneficiary-led development" for the 32,000 squatter families affected by the rehabilitation of the Philippine National Railway tracks or the Southrail project.

De Castro said the concerns raised by Rosales in his letter which was addressed to the Vice President in behalf of the relocated families were not inaccurate.

"It is unfortunate that some quarters have presented to the Archbishop issues that are either recycled, inaccurate or not in their proper context," De Castro in a letter-reply to Rosales.

"The welfare of the relocatees has always been a paramount concern to the government. We are extending all forms of assistance to ease their plight," he said.

The over $50-million government project will cover the Philippine National Railways' 36-kilometer railway from Caloocan City to Alabang, Muntinlupa City. Once completed, it will have the capacity to carry roughly 187,000 passengers a day.

In a letter to De Castro dated May 12, Rosales sought the latter's assurance that the displaced families would be relocated to a site with adequate facilities and would be given alternative "in-city relocation sites."

Rosales said that poor people living along the railroad tracks from Caloocan to Los Baños had come to him several times confiding their relocation problems such as children's education, family income, distant relocation and excessive concern for cut-off dates and deadlines regarding the relocation process.

Rosales also said that based on a study conducted by the Urban Poor Associates, the situation at the relocation site in Cabuyao, Laguna, was "seriously poor"—the water is not potable without boiling; there is still no light and family incomes have fallen to P5,568 on average a month from a pre-location level of P6,500 to P7,500," the cardinal's letter read.

Looking for solutions

De Castro said that while he recognized the difficulties of these affected families, the said government housing sector had not ceased looking for solutions.

He said that since the relocation project began, he had been holding dialogues with the stakeholders including multilateral organizations, private sector groups, non-government organizations, peoples' organizations and the beneficiaries themselves, to minimize the dislocation of affected families.

De Castro also said that he was convinced an in-city resettlement and beneficiary-led development is the best approach to take in relocating the settlers along the North and South rails after a thorough review of several options presented.

"I have directed the agencies under me to ensure that this approach is presented and explained properly to the beneficiaries. They are the ones who will be affected by our actions," the Vice President said.

He pointed out that differences in positions notwithstanding, the government shelter sector had worked smoothly with various organizations assisting the relocatees.

These included the Homeless People's Federation assisted by Fr. Atilajano Fajardo, (CM of the Vincentian Missionary), the Diocese of Malolos through Fr. Dennis Espejo and Fr. Vince Reyes, the Gwlad Kalinga led by Executive Director Anonio Meloto and the UN Habitat.

ROUSED FROM SLEEP, the "evacuees" dutifully file out of their barangay after the warning goes off.

WAITING FOR THE DRILL to start outside their home in Barangay Buhatan, Sto. Domingo, Albay, a woman and child get set to evacuate as soon as the tsunami alarm sounds.

al, though minor, tsunami affecting only unpopulated islands.

It was the first-ever international tsunami drill that put to actual test the disaster-preparedness and response capabilities of tsunami-prone communities.

While they awaited the go-signal from civil defense officials, Buhatan villagers readied their food, light and sleeping provisions.

As they trekked to the designated upper and safer ground, the evacuees brought along thermos bottles, biscuits, pots of rice, pails and bottles of water, umbrellas and kerosene lamps.

A crippled man with backpack joined the moving crowd with infants, a pregnant woman and several old people getting help.

A dog showed up on the street to find his master. Children brought along their school bags while the mothers carried light essentials in plastic bags.

Participated in by 12 countries in the Asia-Pacific region, including those in the Indian Ocean where the terrible tsunami occurred in December 2004, the two-day dry-run was able to test how fast the warnings were received and relayed from the national civil defense agencies down to the concerned local disaster coordinating councils.

The Pacific Tsunami Warning Center installed in Hawaii sent out the warnings about mock earthquakes to the respective national warning stations.

Bells peal

In Buhatan which has a voting population of around 700 and an estimated 1,400 families, the residents were roused from their sleep at around 3:30 a.m. by the pealing of a bell in the village chapel, located just some 20 meters away from the shoreline.

With a megaphone on one hand, a barangay tanod (village watchman) went around the cluster of huts, urging the residents to get ready for an evacuation.

When the second bulletin was received at 5:45 a.m., the bells successively rang, signaling immediate mass evacuation.

THE DISABLED are not exempted from participating in the drill that could one day save the entire barangay from a monster tsunami.

The villagers lined up along the barangay road and proceeded to an elevated area.

By 6:15 a.m., the barangay was virtually deserted as some 1,400 villagers were already settled on an elevated open field.

Roadside metal signs were set up by the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology (Phivolcs) pointing the way to safety.

There were also signs at the coastline declaring danger areas and requesting the people to go to a higher elevation in times of earthquakes.

Boyer Rodriguez of the municipal mayor's office described the simulation exercise as giving importance to preparedness for possible hazards and disasters.

The tsunami drill highlighted the proper warning system that culminated with a mock evacuation, which was very orderly.

The quakes that struck Tuesday and Wednesday, the largest measuring magnitude 7.5, served as a vivid reminder of how seismically volatile the Pacific Rim can be. No damage or injuries were reported.

Vivid reminder

Wednesday's exercise was aimed at avoiding any repeat of the 2004 disaster in Asia, when killer waves hit a dozen nations and left 216,000 people dead or missing—many of them because they were not forewarned of the danger.

At the start of Wednesday's test, e-mails and faxes were sent and alarms sounded in monitoring stations in the participating nations to signal a mock magnitude 8.8 earthquake off the coast of Luzon.

The exercise followed a similar test on Tuesday, when officials simulated a scenario in which a 9.2-magnitude quake hit Chile, triggering a tsunami that would have affected much of the Pacific Ocean region.

In Malaysia, about 400 villagers living along the coast of Sabah state on Borneo Island were evacuated as part of the drill.

Malaysia's Meteorological Service said it received simulated earthquake and tsunami alerts from the Pacific Tsunami Warning Center in Hawaii and Japan's Meteorological Agency early Wednesday.

Renato Solidum, head of the Phivolcs, said he was impressed by the strong turnout for that country's exercise. About two-thirds of Buhatan's 1,200-plus villagers joined while the rest went to work outside the village.

Pablo Torrealba, a UN Development Program official who observed the drill, cited the enthusiastic response and close coordination among local officials.

"The message is that you need two combinations: well-coordinated national institutions and prepared communities. The combination will help to save lives," he told The Associated Press.

Real earthquakes

In Japan, Yuji Nishimae, an official at Japan's Meteorological Agency, said the exercise went as planned.

Several earthquakes hit the Pacific region during the two days of the drill, including temblors off New Zealand, Indonesia and the Pacific island nation of Tonga.

The latest, a magnitude 5.8 earthquake on Wednesday morning, rattled Tonga at the same time that emergency authorities on the country's islands were broadcasting simulated earthquake alerts as part of the Pacific-wide simulation.

Early Wednesday, New Zealand national civil defense controller Mike O'Leary said the 7.5-magnitude quake that hit north of that country's Kermadec Islands on Tuesday had generated a minor local tsunami that did not affect any populated areas.

Chris Ryan, of the National Meteorological and Oceanographic Center, the Australian organization that sends tsunami warnings to emergency officials, said the test went according to plan in Australia, despite the quakes.

"No major problems or unexpected events apart from a couple of earthquakes before the exercise started—real ones, that is," he said, referring to the quakes that jolted New Zealand and Indonesia.

Participants

On Tuesday, major participants included Chile, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia, Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala, Mexico, Honduras, Australia, the United States, Canada and several Pacific islands.

Participants on Wednesday included the Philippines, Indonesia, Vietnam, Cambodia, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Taiwan, South Korea, Japan, Russia, China and several Pacific islands.

prosperity should be regarded as mutually inclusive.

"Liberty becomes the guarantee that, free from all interference and suppression, we all can conceive of the good life and act according to those conceptions. I venture the proposition that a society marked by such liberty is prosperous," he said.

Panganiban had also given speeches before the United Nations Development Program and the Philippine American Chamber of Commerce in New York. He is set to give lectures in Europe later.

Impeach bid ushers in early Christmas

Palace's promises, including cash, projects and appointments, during last year's impeachment have not been complied with," said the opposition congressman from Iloilo.

After bungling the impeachment attempt against Ms Arroyo last year, Minority Leader Francis Escudero announced Monday the opposition would resume its bid to unseat the 59-year-old President when the Third Congress opens in July.

No visit from Santa

Escudero also threatened to expel from the minority bloc those who would not support the impeachment initiative. Last year, Ms Arroyo's majority allies soundly squelched the opposition's effort to oust her over allegations she stole the 2004 presidential election.

The Constitution allows only one impeachment case to be filed against the President in one year.

Suplico yesterday told reporters some administration lawmakers were unhappy that Malacañang had not lived up to promises they would be rewarded for nipping the impeachment move in the bud last year.

"Santa Claus did not visit us, as the Palace promised," Suplico quoted one disgruntled Arroyo ally.

Assistant Majority Leader Monico Puentevella of Bacolod City fumed at Suplico's swipe. "Must we be dragged into this spectacle of gutter politics once more?"

"Our people are already tired of too much politicking," said Puentevella, pointing out that the "impeachment circus," not Santa Claus, "was coming back to town."

"The Palace does not dictate on us and we in the majority have our own sense of discernment in deciding on any impeachment complaint," said Puentevella. "The minority are already in a panic mode because of their imminent defeat."

Kill move earliest

Rep. Salacnib Baterina of Iloilo Sur dismissed reports that Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez had ordered House supporters to kill at the earliest possible opportunity any impeachment case against the President this year.

"The rules on impeachment will be followed to the letter and we will be transparent in all our actions," said Baterina.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita said it was also only normal for the administration to say that it did not expect the move to unseat Ms Arroyo to prosper.

Rep. Marcelino Libanan of Eastern Samar said: "The biggest problem that the minority has to hurdle is not the process in the House but getting enough signatures. They set their own policy—no 79 signatures, no filing of raps. That's their setback."

He referred to the number of signatures needed to move the complaint to the Senate for trial. Libanan pointed out that despite the efforts of the minority to bring the impeachment complaint to the Senate last year "51 signatures was the best they got even with the momentum of their Arroyo-oust campaign at that time."

No one to blame

"If they fail to get the magic number, they lose. Period. They have no one to blame but themselves. The President does not meddle in the individual decision of administration lawmakers," said Libanan.

Opposition party-list Rep. Joel Villanueva of the Citizens Battle Against Corruption described the new impeachment case as a "litmus test" to determine the principles and source of conviction of each member of the opposition.

Lito Monico Lorenzana, chair of the Charter Change Advocacy Commission, called on Congress to give priority to moves to amend the Constitution and adopt the parliamentary system instead of impeachment.

"Charter reforms are needed to arrest the growing number of Filipino families going hungry, Lorenzana said."

"The parliamentary form and federal structure will enable us to replace plundering and power-tripping leaders," he added. With reports from Christine O. Aven-daño and Norman Bordadora

Palace unfazed by German threat to suspend investments in RP

MALACAÑANG IS unfazed by the prospect of foregoing investments from Germany because of the long delay in compensating Fraport AG, the biggest foreign shareholder of Philippine International Air Terminals Co. (Piatco), for building the Ninoy Aquino International Air Terminal 3.

In a briefing, Finance Secretary Margarito Teves said that while it was unfortunate that Germany would withhold infrastructure investments in the country pending the resolution of the Naia 3 compensation, "the country will just have to find ways and means to compensate for the foregone investments from somebody else." Germany funnels over $1 billion in annual investments into the country.

German Ambassador Axel Raimund Weishaup bared his country's plan to freeze infrastructure investments in the Philippines in protest over the government's foot dragging in reaching an amicable settlement on the $450 million to $550 million being demanded by Fraport and Piatco which built the Naia 3.

The Supreme Court nullified Fraport and Piatco's Naia 3 contract and allowed the government to expropriate the facility subject to just and fair compensation. But Malacañang wants to have a third-party assessor to determine the just and fair compensation as it argued that a big chunk of the investments that Fraport and Piatco claimed to have spent on Naia 3 were used for bribes.

Teves said that he was not overly concerned about the German ambassador's threat because he was skeptical on how much sway Weishaup holds on his countrymen's business decisions. "We are not sure the German ambassador can influence all German investors," Teves said.

For Teves, the key to keeping investments flowing into country was improving the economic and political factors.

"If we strengthen our fundamentals that businessmen are looking into, we'd be able to generate more investments from other countries," Teves said.

Palace unfazed by German threat to suspend investments in RP

MALACANANG IS unfazed by the prospect of foregoing investments from Germany because of the long delay in compensating Fraport AG, the biggest foreign shareholder of Philippine International Air Terminals Co. (Piatco), for building the Ninoy Aquino International Air Terminal 3.

In a briefing, Finance Secretary Margarito Teves said that while it was unfortunate that Germany would withhold infrastructure investments in the country pending the resolution of the Naia 3 compensation, "the country will just have to find ways and means to compensate for the foregone investments from somebody else." Germany funnels over $1 billion in annual investments into the country.

German Ambassador Axel Raimund Weishaupt bared his country's plan to freeze infrastructure investments in the Philippines in protest over the government's foot dragging in reaching an amicable settlement on the $450 million to $550 million being demanded by Fraport and Piatco which built the Naia 3.

The Supreme Court nullified Fraport and Piatco's Naia 3 contract and allowed the government to expropriate the facility subject to just and fair compensation. But Malacañang wants to have a third-party assessor to determine the just and fair compensation as it argued that a big chunk of the investments that Fraport and Piatco claimed to have spent on Naia 3 were used for bribes.

Teves said that he was not overly concerned about the German ambassador's threat because he was skeptical on how much sway Weishaupt holds on his countrymen's business decisions. "We are not sure the German ambassador can influence all German investors," Teves said.

For Teves, the key to keeping investments flowing into country was improving the economic and political factors.

"If we strengthen our fundamentals that businessmen are looking into, we'd be able to generate more investments from other countries," Teves said.

SC ousts justice from Imelda case

By Armand N. Nocum

THE SUPREME COURT HAS ORDERED Sandiganbayan Associate Justice Gregory S. Ong to stop hearing the trial of former First Lady Imelda Marcos on ill-gotten wealth charges after Ong was reported to have said that he would dismiss the case because it was unwarranted and that he found chief witness former Solicitor General Frank Chavez "mayabang (arrogant)."

In the decision penned by Associate Justice Adolfo Azcuna, the high court directed Ong to recuse himself from the case, saying the chair of the antigraft court's fourth division should be mindful "of the principle that judges should avoid impropriety in their conduct" at all times.

"In insulating the bench from unwarranted criticism, thus preserving a democratic way of life, it is essential that judges be above suspicion. It bears stressing that the duty of judges is not only to administer justice but also to conduct themselves in a manner that would avoid any suspicion of irregularity," the tribunal said.

The court ruled on the petition filed the Office of the Ombudsman asking that Ong be prevented from hearing the case after Ong told Special Prosecutor Wendell E. Sulit that he did not want to take the case.

"I do not want that case. I will dismiss that case. When I listened in to the case you were prosecuting, Chavez was saying nothing but hearsay," Sulit quoted Ong as telling him in his sala in February 2003.

Bantay Kalikasan fined for La Mesa Ecopark

By Blanche S. Rivera and Philip C. Tubeza

THE TABLES APPEAR TO HAVE BEEN TURNED ON Bantay Kalikasan as the government yesterday declared the environmental group had broken the law by operating the La Mesa Ecopark without an environmental compliance certificate.

The Laguna Lake Development Authority (LLDA) also fined Bantay Kalikasan P50,000 for violating PD 1586 establishing the environmental impact system and an additional P5,000 for each year of its transgression.

But even before the LLDA could serve Bantay Kalikasan the proper notice—scheduled to be carried out today—the environmental group claimed that the La Mesa Ecopark did not need an environmental clearance certificate because the resort and picnic grounds were not critical to Metro Manila's water supply.

"It's 70 to 80 meters below the dam reservoir so it's not environmentally critical. And what we did here is to rehabilitate an already existing park," said John Paul Balayon, Bantay Kalikasan operations manager.

LA MESA Dam Ecopark

Balayon agreed the park needed a "certificate of non-coverage" and said it would apply for it.

The LLDA's call against Bantay Kalikasan is ironic, coming at the height of a campaign by the group to stop a housing project for employees of the Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System (MWSS) on grounds it would contaminate the reservoir on top of not having an environmental clearance.

Rep. Edecel Lagman, a supporter of the housing project who tried to fight off Kalikasan's moves, charged that the environmental group itself had no clearance to operate the park.

"Based on the investigation report of our Environmental Impact Assessment Unit, your La Mesa Ecopark (33 hectares within the La Mesa Watershed) has violated the ... laws ... for undertaking a development activity without first securing an environmental compliance certificate and LLDA clearance," Casimiro Ynares III, LLDA general manager, said in his notice to the environmental group.

The LLDA also issued a similar notice to the MWSS for its executive housing project.

The LLDA asked Bantay Kalikasan to apply for an ECC and LLDA clearance within 30 days. The MWSS, which was fined P5,000 per year of violation, was also required to secure an LLDA clearance.

Former Department of Environment and Natural Resources chief Elisea Gozun, who ABS-CBN Foundation chair Gina Lopez claims had told the group that an ECC was "not required," denied exempting the La Mesa Ecopark from obtaining the necessary environmental permits. Bantay Kalikasan is part of the ABS-CBN Foundation.

"I really do not recall having said that ... You know that all development projects require an ECC. I would never have said anything contrary to our own regulations," Gozun told the Inquirer in a phone interview.

"What I would have done had I known there had been an application (for an ECC) was to facilitate the issuance," Gozun said.

Bantay Kalikasan leads the "Save La Mesa Coalition" opposed to the housing project for 1,411 employees of the MWSS for fear domestic wastes would contaminate the reservoir, the main source of drinking water for Metro Manila's 12 million residents.

Tax raps vs Juday upheld; arraignment set today

By Cynthia D. Balana

MOVIE ACTRESS JUDY ANN Santos, popularly known as "Juday," will be arraigned today by the Court of Tax Appeals after the Department of Justice upheld the findings of the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) that she had incurred income tax deficiency of P2.714 million in 2002 "to the prejudice of the government."

The arraignment was set by the CTA after Santos' "Motion to Reconsider the Denial of her Motion to Quash the Information" was rejected by the latter for lack of merit, the BIR said.

In her motion for reconsideration, Santos claimed that she was grossly denied right to due process; that the information failed to allege the elements constituting the offense charged; and that the prosecuting attorney has no authority to file the case.

The DOJ said it found no merit for a reinvestigation of the case after a preliminary investigation found a reasonable ground to believe that tax evasion had been committed by the actress when she failed to declare her combined income from the ABS-CBN television network, Viva Productions and Star Cinema.

According to the DOJ resolution dated Oct. 1, 2005, Santos had "willfully, unlawfully and feloniously" filed a false and fraudulent tax return for 2002 by indicating therein a gross income of P8.033 million when her correct income was P16.396 million, or a difference of P8.362 million.

The CTA assumed jurisdiction of the case since the amount involved was more than P1 million in tax deficiency. A bail of P20,000 was recommended for Santos' temporary liberty.

Aside from a string of movies to her credit, Santos has done several product endorsements for 555 Sardines, Leonardo Bags, Angel Evaporated Milk, Fitrum, Piltel, AMA Computer Learning Center, Pacific Blue Shades, and San Miguel Beer, among others.

She was also the lead star of Krystala, a 30-minute fantasy series aired by ABS-CBN during the first quarter of 2005.

Jail officials told to identify youth offenders

By Norman Bordadora

INTERIOR SECRETARY RONALDO PUNO has asked the country's jail officials to coordinate with the Public Attorney's Office to identify the juveniles still languishing in adult jails instead of being rehabilitated in youth homes.

Under Republic Act 9344 or the Juvenile Justice System Act, which was signed into law by the President last April 28, children in conflict with the law shall undergo diversion programs like counseling, capacity building, training and socio-civic work under the DSWD's supervision instead of being detained in jail.

Puno said many juvenile inmates or children in conflict with the law in the provincial prisons have yet to be transferred to the rehabilitation centers run by the Department of Social Welfare and Development.

"I have instructed officials of the Bureau of Jail Management and Penology to help speed up the release of juvenile offenders who have remained in prison because of pending court orders," Puno said.

"The BJMP should coordinate with PAO to find out what legal obstacles need to be hurdled to facilitate the quick release of these juveniles still languishing in adult jails," he added.

John I

1st Reading: Acts 15:7-21
Gospel: John 15:9-11

Jesus said to his disciples, "As the Father has loved me, so I have loved you; remain in my love. You will remain in my love if you keep my commandments, just as I have kept my Father's commandments and remain in his love."

"I have told you all this, that my own joy may be in you and your joy may be complete."

Commentary

Peter stands and announces that the Spirit makes no distinction, purifying the Gentiles' hearts by means of faith, much the same as their own hearts. They should not have an added burden laid on them, a yoke that is unnecessary. Paul and Barnabas speak, and then James the elder of the Jerusalem Church. He concurs and asks only that the Gentiles refrain from what is impure. It is decided. And Jesus is clear that there is only one commandment that all the others must serve to highlight: love one another as I have loved you; and you will know the joy of God.

Madame Miriam

MANY JOURNEY INTO THE DESERT TO GAIN self-control or grow in wisdom. Jesus famously spent 40 days in the desert to be tested by the devil. Unfortunately for our democratic experiment, Sen. Miriam Defensor-Santiago joined President Macapagal-Arroyo on her state visit to Saudi Arabia and emerged from the desert as, well, a fortune-teller, a la Madame Aurig.

We do not know whether this is a sign that she was shown the kingdoms of the world and liked what she saw, or whether she is simply learning to turn the stone of political reality into the bread of political opportunity. Perhaps she is still working out her response to the second of Jesus' three temptations in the desert. Jump from the temple top, and wait for the angels to catch you. Maybe she could not wait, and decided to feather the ground, so to speak, to cushion her fall.

"I don't want to forfeit by default my duty to help write the new Constitution," Santiago said last week, rather unexpectedly, by way of explaining her readiness to vote together with the House majority to convene a constituent assembly. This came as a surprise, because until last week we did not realize she thought she was elected in 2004 to write a new Constitution in 2006.

But this much we know: When she returned to the country over the weekend, the feisty senator suddenly predicted the demise of the Senate—not next year, not by 2010, but in two months' time, by July. (It would have been even more stunning if she had decided to put more distance between the living and the dead, and resigned, but we suppose there are limits even to fortune-telling.)

Naturally, her pronouncement got the attention of the media, which is of course part of the point. Unlike the country's many fortune-tellers, however, the lawyer-senator had a lawyerly caveat: "Between May 15 when the present session resumes, and July 24 when a new regular session begins, the Supreme Court will have enough time to hear and decide a test case on the House resolution to convene as a constituent assembly," she said. If—a big if, it turns out, even in her own estimation—the high court rules that the two chambers of Congress can in fact vote jointly when they are convened as a constituent assembly, then the Senate will be history by July. If not, then, well, she was merely belaboring the obvious.

Surely even Santiago, who famously used to eat death threats for breakfast, can see that the basis for her prediction is too thin, without sustenance. But this has not stopped her from issuing more statements.

This week, she made a rather unusually public attempt at number-crunching. The abolition of the Senate and the adoption of a unicameral parliamentary system, she said, would save the country some P5 billion in the next five years.

Her arithmetic is suspect, not only because it (again) is conditional but also because her approach to math is all too political.

It doesn't bother her if the Senate were abolished, she said, because after all her colleagues were not elected fair and square. "If Senate elections do not truly reflect the people's will, let us abolish the Senate and move up in our political evolution," she said.

Apparently, the crystal ball she dug out of the desert not only allows her to read the future; it allows her to divine the past.

She made an astonishing claim: Survey tail-enders somehow ended up topping the Senate race. "That can only be explained either by money or by magic. So how can certain senators adopt a moral stance with respect to President Macapagal-Arroyo's election?" she asked. Because she ended up in the (for her) unfamiliar place of seventh (in other words, right in the undistinguished middle), we suppose that she has no quarrel with the results.

We wonder what she would have thought of the abolition of the Senate if she had topped the last elections. Perhaps she wouldn't have gone to the deserts of Arabia in the first place.

But the issue is Santiago as fortune-teller. Aside from the shock value she provided, there really isn't much to recommend her in her new role. We suggest she keep her day job.

Whipping boy and tutorials

THERE'VE BEEN REACTIONS FROM ABROAD to issues that rock this country. Here are some of the more pointed comments:

From Sheikh Jarrah, in Jerusalem, Israel, Ma. Teresa Alang writes: "Your INQUIRER column 'Bogus prophecy,' carried by INQ7.net, strips the façade covering the swindle mislabeled as 'Charter change.' But it overlooks one point: Our politicians make a basically sound Constitution into a whipping boy to escape lashing."

"The President to the lowliest congressman dump on the Charter all problems, from lack of investments to legislative gridlock. No one refers to their avarice and corruption. Congress, for example, hasn't passed a law to ban dynasties, much less one to authorize a 'people's initiative.' And I'm not even talking about fertilizer scams, pork barrel, etc."

"A people's initiative or constituent assembly will not result in change. It means more of the same oppression by the same oppressors. The Constitution has not failed us. We have failed the Constitution, starting with the President."

Dr. Manolo Abella led the United Nations office on migration until his recent retirement. From Vancouver in Canada, he writes:

"Dr. Tessa Tan Torres, a Filipino professional working with WHO, called my attention to your column, 'Crutches anyone?' on overseas foreign workers' remittances. I'm glad these questions are being raised, suggesting to government that we need more than just to rely on these inflows."

"While many observers (especially sociologists) lament conspicuous consumption by remittance-receiving households, the fact is that people act rationally. Note that remittances rise when times are hard—motivated by altruism, unlike speculative capital which is very nervous."

"World Bank studies show that migrant households do not have a consumption behavior any different from non-migrant households with the same income. Like you and me, they'll invest their hard-earned money in something sure: children's education, better housing, better food, etc."

I REMEMBER THAT IT WAS POPOY LAGMAN and not Satur Ocampo who did not particularly want Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo to succeed Erap during Edsa II. Lagman's position was "Resign All," a slogan its marchers shouted in Mendiola and painted on walls, a call for both Erap and Gloria to resign to pave the way for new elections. Lagman's argument was that the entire Erap administration, to which GMA belonged and had acquiesced by silence, if not by active cooperation, had betrayed the public trust. It should be abolished in full. He called for Hilario Davide to head a caretaker government and preside over snap elections.

It was Bayan Muna that thought otherwise, agreeing to GMA becoming president for many reasons. Not the least of it was that after playing it safe for a while, GMA had finally come out and plotted with them (they have proof of it, and frankly I cannot understand why they do not belabor the point) as well indeed as with the military to oust Erap. She was an ally.

Ocampo's side won over Lagman's in the Left camp, the "Resign All" position being promptly shoved aside. Well, Bayan Muna might have won the battle, but it has lost the war.

"Kataksilan" (treachery) is the word government has used in a documentary purporting to show a Left-Right conspiracy against GMA, which presumably justified—and should justify in future—emergency rule. That is all very well, except for one thing. Who has betrayed whom?

Over the past year, no other group in this country has been persecuted with murderous zeal by government than Bayan Muna. The "murderous" is by no stretch of the imagination metaphorical. Last Saturday night, gunmen shot and killed Manuel Nardo in a karaoke bar in Pampanga, bringing to an eye-popping 93 the number of Bayan Muna members killed since GMA took power, and to 123 the number of leftists killed over the same period. Almost unbelievably, Nardo was the fourth leftist to die by a bullet in five days, turning the murders into a near-daily thing.

And despite the fact that the Supreme Court

VIEWPOINT

Juan L. Mercado

"They will not risk it in small projects that are likely to collapse. Small enterprises have a notoriously high turnover rate everywhere in the world. What alternatives are there for a recipient of small remittances?"

"Our NGOs are excited about small projects. I don't hold much hope in these projects. Investing in another transport vehicle, like a jeepney, or another grocery may do some good for the migrant's family. But it will be at the expense of another jeepney or grocery owner who loses his or her share of a small market."

"It will only be when we have a better developed capital market that one can hope for mobilizing remittances for financing development. Our financial institutions still have to come up with ways of developing secondary markets for mortgages and the like."

"Our local governments can, perhaps, make it happen faster if they issue high-interest bonds to obtain financing for infrastructure development."

"Because they are stable, remittances offer an opportunity to reduce the cost of borrowing (through securitization) in the international market for finance. A one-percent reduction in the cost of our borrowing can amount to hundreds of millions in debt servicing costs."

From the United States, Glenn Taylor writes: "Thanks for your column, 'Tales of two cities.' Two main points, in particular, struck home:

"(a) The need to mount sustained policies and programs to make cities engines for economic growth and at the same time keep them livable, and (b) Foremost is the leadership value of the local government officials." Asian Institute of Management says. Next is "a strong support system, offered by business alliances and responsive civil society."

"My wife and I are currently engaging in a partnership with the local government of her hometown, Barotac Viejo, Iloilo. The mayor, Raul Tupas, and the council are supportive..."

"Our partnership with the LGU concerns development of new infrastructure and lifestyle facilities for the community; specifically an integrated transport terminal, wet/dry markets and attractive shopping centers and surroundings."

"We hope these will reduce pollution, traffic congestion, provide jobs, more efficient farm-to-market distribution for producers, be a source of community public services, including an open and maintained park and riverside walkway."

From Bangkok, retired ship captain Ariston Roxas and his wife Justin read the column, "Kingly power," on the Thai monarch. They sent back a rollicking article: "All I Really Need To Know I Learned in Philippine Politics." The author was not given. But here are some "tutorial" points:

"1. Voting is a right here but getting counted is a privilege."

"2. When children of deposed leaders like Imee Marcos or Jinggoy Estrada insist that current Palace occupants are thieves and crooks, believe them. They've been there."

"3. If a journalist writes something deemed offensive, they call it libel. When a lawmaker says something defamatory they call it privilege speech."

"4. In UP they are referred to as 'hard-line activists'; in Mendiola, they are 'hardcore militants.' In Congress, they're party-list representatives. Simply put, there are no communists here."

"5. The State of the Nation Address is when the country's most prominent and influential liars come together to listen to the country's biggest liar."

"6. The pork barrel per se is not evil or corrupt. Lawmakers are."

'Kataksilan'

THERE'S THE RUB

Conrado de Quiros

has junked PP 1017, releasing the "Batasan 5" from their congressional prison, Raul Gonzalez continues to dangle a legal sword over their heads. As things stand now though, that is probably the least of their worries. The first is the real sword dangling over their heads, as shown by the mounting body count of Bayan Muna members.

You can't have a graver case of treachery than that. But the treachery goes beyond Bayan Muna to the nation itself.

The reason for singling out Bayan Muna for persecution is easy to see. It is the "weakest link" in terms of public acceptance among those opposing GMA. It can be persecuted with near impunity, the public being expected (not entirely wrongly) to not lift a finger to stop it in the belief (completely wrongly) the mayhem can happen only to "them" and not to "us." That was what the Nazis did in the 1930s: trot out a scapegoat in the Jews and Bolsheviks whom they lumped together as one. The Jews were presumably behind Bolshevism, a batty idea now but which the Nazis sold completely earnestly, and especially ferociously, at the time. It's a classic template for tyranny.

The case against the Batasan 5 alone is a monumental case of selective retribution. At the very least, what makes it so is that GMA is the last person to have a right to rail against Left-Right conspirators. She was one.

At the very most, what makes it so is that the government has no lack of people to arrest and jail in the attempted "withdrawal of support" last February. There's more prima-facie evidence against them. The "withdrawal of support" was never a secret. It openly and loudly advertised itself, appealing to the public for support. But the government cannot go after its leaders because it stands to prove only that their "coup" would have been the most popular coup in the world, having the blessings of most Filipinos. There are not enough jails in this country to hold those who want GMA out and are actively plotting to make it so.

But it's the killings that are truly terrifying. This isn't just routine murder, this is wholesale slaughter. More than journalists, it's the leftists that are being butchered like chickens, to quote a phrase used by one of them. And less than journalists, nobody is lifting a voice to protest it, or a finger to stop it. If there is anything more terrifying than those killings, it is the silence of the nation in the face of it.

Doubtless, they themselves are partly to blame for that lack of sympathy from the public. You murder your own comrades and gleefully toast it before the public, that public isn't going to send its lamentations to heaven, or to the world, when you yourself are murdered. But this is a case that goes beyond liking the victims or taking sides. This is a case where the victim is the nation itself.

What we're seeing today is not just the murder of leftists, it is the murder of human rights, the very thing we fought bitterly to retake from Marcos. As we saw then, the right to assemble, to freely express ourselves, indeed to continue to exist on this earth, is not a luxury, like tea, it is a necessity, like breath. What we're seeing today is not just the murder of activists, it is the murder of democracy, its chilling message being addressed not just to the activists but to anyone who would oppose a creeping dictatorship: "This is the fate that awaits you." What we're seeing today is not just the murder of Bayan Muna members, it is the murder of all that is decent and good in this country. Look at Nazi Germany and see what happens to a people who agree to the killing of other people in the thought that it has nothing to do with them.

Ask not for whom the bell tolls, it tolls for you. Ask not who lies in the red-draped coffin, you do.

Cultural interaction from around the globe

YESTERDAY DRAMATISTS FROM THE CENTRE for Training and Research in Live Performing Arts of Burkina Faso arrived in Muñoz City, Nueva Ecija, Luzon's science center, to start a three-day cultural interaction with folks from that region. The visiting dramatists will conduct a workshop on classical and indigenous African drama and acting methodology for the local faculty and students. In turn, the townspeople will treat them to a cultural fare that includes interpretative dances by students of the Central Luzon State University around the theme of planting and harvesting of rice, and the Bungkos Palay Dance Troupe of Mayor Nestor Alvarez. The visitors may even do some rice planting in the rain.

Burkina Faso is a small French-speaking country of 10 million in West Africa. But in the next two days its drama people will be treated by Muñoz officials, led by Mayor Alvarez and townsfolk, to traditional Filipino hospitality and an array of native talents.

They are part of the 150 top university faculty and students from 12 drama institutions around the world participating in the World Festival of Drama Schools. The festival is a major event of the 32nd Unesco-International Theater Institute (ITI) World Congress, which is being held in Asia for the first time in ITI's 58 years. The Philippines won the bid to host this biennial world cultural Olympics in the last congress in Tampico, Mexico, two years ago.

The festival borrowed from the successful SEA Games here. Instead of being confined to Metro Manila, the cultural events are being distributed around the country in order to maximize exposure of the host cities and the guests to each other. The idea of a "Theater for All" along the theme of cultural diversity and art as a tool for social development was conceptualized by Unesco education chair Dr. Corneliu Dumitriu, ITI Philippines president Cecile Guidote-Alvarez and festival director Nick Lizaso. The 11 participating RP cities were chosen for the strong presence of educational institutions and cultural traditions in their regions. Lizaso said an average of seven schools are participating per region. It's easy to see what a great cultural boon this will be for our faculty and students.

Yesterday Ilocos Sur Gov. Chavit Singson sent his private plane to fly dramatists from the National School for Dramatic Arts of Lima, Peru, to Vigan for cultural interaction, with the University of Northern Philippines in the lead. He assured them the natives won't need Spanish interpreters since Vigan has preserved a generous share of Hispanic culture. Another city with a rich Hispanic past, Zamboanga, is hosting the theater faculty of Veracruzana University in Mexico, and doubtless the natives will put to good use their chabacano, a pidgin Spanish that's bound to shock and awe the visitors.

Baguio, with its dense concentration of schools, will host the National School of Drama of India, while Santiago City in Isabela, under Mayor Amelita Navarro, will interact with the drama department of South Africa's University of Cape Town. Twelve Isabela schools, led by La Sallette University, will participate, but observers are expected from all over Cagayan Valley.

Legazpi City interacts with the Shanghai Theater Academy of China. Students of Bicol University will show off the legends of Mayon in dance and drama, but observers are expected also from Camarines and Sorsogon. Cagayan de Oro City, seat of Xavier University, will receive Rumania's National University of Drama and Film, named after I.L. Caragiale, a famous actor. Participants are expected from as far as Iligan City and Bukidnon, and Misamis Oriental Gov. Oscar Moreno has prepared a fireworks show.

Iloilo City hosts the Karpenko-Kary Kyiv National University of Theater, Cinema and Television of the Ukraine, with the University of San Agustin in the lead, while Puerto Princesa City interacts with the theater department of Singapore's Nanyang Academy of Fine Arts. Mayor Edward Hagedorn personally picked Singapore doubtless because of its clean and green image, just like his city. Davao City, seat of Ateneo de Davao, asked to host the faculty of Dramatic and Music Arts of Teheran University, perhaps due to its large Muslim population, but observers are expected from as far as General Santos City and Davao Oriental.

Philippine tourism should get a big boost from this event. Last night, all 11 regions were simultaneously linked up with their respective visitors' countries by webcast, as they commenced the cultural performances. Moreover, each foreign delegation will be filming its experiences and all of these films will be compiled at the Unesco headquarters in Paris for worldwide dissemination. The delegates' treasure trove of RP memories will include a visit to a Unesco World Heritage Site in their region. For instance, the South Africa drama group will be taken from Isabela to Banaue to see the world-famous Ifugao Rice Terraces, while the Ukrainian group will visit Miag-Ao Church in Iloilo. The Singapore group will visit the Underground River in Palawan while the Chinese will get to enjoy the world's most perfect cone.

One of the highlights of the congress will be the interaction in Bohol today between the heavenly voices of the Loboc Choir and Mexico's famed Chimalli Choir. The latter was formed by Mexico's Mecec Program, which takes care of Mexican children "in especially difficult circumstances." Its members are carefully selected from auditions held in 15 municipalities. From Loboc, the two choirs will be brought to Manila to sing at the dinner to be tendered by President Macapagal-Arroyo for the delegates on May 22, and the opening of the Leaders' Forum, led by Unesco executive director Koichiro Matsuura, on May 23.

Permanent disability

MY MOTHER IS SOFT-SPOKEN, BUT SHE STANDS HER ground on issues that most people shy away from. Just recently, our barangay captain asked her to sign up for the campaign launched by the supporters of President Macapagal-Arroyo. Realizing that it was the signature campaign, which the Arroyo administration unashamedly calls the people's initiative, my mother declined, saying she was against it.

This morning, while we were enjoying the cool morning breeze, my aunt's house help, Ate Mile, mentioned that my cousin had asked her to sign a piece of paper. My cousin, a barangay official, told her it was the minutes of the recent barangay assembly. Ate Mile signed a yellow piece of paper and another white sheet.

My mother, who is the barangay treasurer, told her the yellow paper was indeed the minutes of the barangay assembly, but the other one was for the signature campaign. When told that it called for Charter change and the possible extension of GMA's term, Ate Mile protested in our native tongue: "I did not know that I wasn't told it was for that purpose. We will be going backward, if she does not step down."

That's people's initiative for you. Whatever the Arroyo administration officials say, the only ones they manage to convince are themselves. But that is not surprising. For two years now, the squatter in Malacañang has been convincing herself that she is the legitimate President.

I guess it is not difficult for her to convince herself that she is indeed the President. After all, the candidate I voted for is dead and the duly elected president is also dead. She has Garcillano, Gonzalez and Defensor to defend her, and they are such brilliant, logical and truthful people!

When I wrote in my blog what I thought about the current political situation, my dentist wrote back to ask why I was so angry with GMA. She was surprised because I had taken part in Edsa II.

I replied that I was not fighting for GMA then, but I was there, like many others, to protest against President Joseph Estrada's conduct. I never questioned GMA's constitutional right to succeed to the presidency; I had to respect what the Constitution mandated, even though I never liked her. Now, what I am questioning is her legitimacy, and her behavior and that of Jose Pidal and Jose Pidal Jr.

And she has the temerity to push for the revision of the Constitution!

She started by creating a commission, which was not even permitted by the Constitution. Moreover, on the day we were supposed to attend the assembly sponsored by the commission, I received a call from a classmate who told me that attendance was by invitation. We had to represent a sector of the community to be admitted to the convention center in the capitol where the assembly was being held. Well, that's consultation for you.

Now here comes Speaker Jose de Venecia announcing that by July this year, we would already have a parliamentary government. No surprise there. Even before I was qualified to vote, I already knew that the Speaker had dreams that were bigger than Dumbo's. They are such big dreams that even a Comelec official was surprised by them. The official pointed out that it would take some time to verify the signatures, and the Comelec would need almost P3 billion to do it and then conduct a plebiscite.

Someone ought to tell our people that the money they paid for the expanded value-added tax will be used to satisfy the whims of those who want to change the Constitution in order to fulfill their dreams of: (1) having a graceful exit; (2) extending their stay in power; (3) at last, becoming the head of the government; or (4) all of the above.

But I am not really worried, for several reasons. The first is that the Senate, or at least the more sensible members of that chamber, will not let GMA and the House of Representatives bully them into changing the Constitution. The senators are more knowledgeable about the Constitution, while most congressmen seem to be uninformed or misinformed (or pretending to be either, which is idiotic) about the provisions of the Constitution.

The second reason is that the Supreme Court, the vanguard of the Constitution, is still there. And I pray that it will continue to perform its noble task of defending the Constitution. I have faith in the Supreme Court even though most of its members have been appointed by GMA. And that faith has been strengthened by their decisions on Executive Order 464 and Presidential Proclamation 1017.

But my best reason for believing Charter change will not happen soon is that the people are very well aware of the current political situation. The surveys show that a big percentage of Filipinos do not only want GMA to resign but also want the Constitution to stay as it is. In fact, a classmate told me that his boss, an elected government official and a known GMA supporter, is against the revision of the Constitution. Of course, I cannot verify that, but if it's true, kudos to him.

As to some Filipinos living abroad who say that GMA is the best person to lead the country, I would believe it only if they said that after living here for a few months. The Filipino is intelligent, and there is no doubt about that. Only the administration says that Filipinos are more concerned about what they have on their tables. Such demeaning utterances could come only from officials who do not value the people's opinion.

Only administration officials say that the people still want GMA to lead the country, that she was put there by God, that she is the best person to lead the country and that the only solution to all the problems of the country is the revision of the Constitution. But these statements are little more than the incoherent babbling of persons who are prone to self-deception, like someone who continues to believe in the legitimacy of her presidency.

Does that constitute permanent disability? And that is one legitimate ground for removing her from office.

Culion: The nuns' story (1)

THIS MONTH AND YEAR, CULION ISLAND IN Palawan marks its 100th anniversary as a place where lepers of yore were shipped and confined for most of their lives. Culion, once the biggest leper colony in the world, is a leper colony no more. It is now a thriving island municipality. The new generation no longer bears the marks of the dreaded disease that medical science has finally licked. The scars are still there, no doubt, but the place and its people have long begun the journey toward healing.

I was one of those who helped write the handsome coffee-table book, "Culion Island: A Leper Colony's 100-Year Journey Toward Healing." The experience was rewarding indeed. Here are excerpts from "The Nuns' Story," one of the pieces that I wrote.

The sea was calm when the four French Sisters of Saint Paul of Chartres (SPC) boarded the ship that would take them from Manila to their mission assignment: Culion Island. With prayers on their lips and faith in their hearts, they bravely sailed forth, "to consecrate ourselves for the care of the poor lepers."

Founded in Levesville-la-Chenard in France in 1696 "to instruct the ignorant and assist the afflicted," the sisters were to become "gleaners," to look after the last, the least. The first Sisters of Saint Paul of Chartres arrived in the Philippines in 1904. Two years later, four of them would embark on a mission among the outcasts.

The SPC nuns were responding to the call of the Apostolic Delegate, Monsignor Ambrose Agius, OSB. They would be the first Catholic nuns to sail in that direction. For some time, they would be the only nurses working there.

Sister Sidonie Bureau, the superior, Sister Marie de Bon Pasteur Lintot, Sister Calixte Christen and Sister Therese de Jesus sailed for that remote island at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of May 22, 1906. Several hours later, the sea turned rough and stayed that way until the ship reached its destination. But the journey was not without its light and hilarious moments. For the nuns, the experience at sea was a foretaste of the difficult but fulfilling Church mission in Culion that would continue throughout the century.

HUMAN FACE

The nuns arrived in Culion toward the evening of May 25, 1906, two days ahead of their wards. Dr. Carlos de May, director of the Colony (1903-1907), welcomed them with a lantern in his hand, lighting the path to their "new" dwelling where bats felt at home. Several times, in that semi-darkness, the nuns stumbled on the steep and narrow path.

"We viewed with great interest the panorama that unfolded before us," one of the nuns later wrote in French. "No matter where we looked, we saw chains of mountains. Opposite us, the mountain slope was strewn with houses in the middle of clumps of trees. This was Balala where employees of the Bureau of Health would settle. In the part of the island extending to our left, there were more houses stretching out from the top of the mountain to its base. Only six were constructed with boards whitened with lime. All others were made of nipa (palm fronds). At the far end, on a sort of headland going to the sea, there stood the church with its old ramparts which made it look like a castle. Near it shone the lighthouse."

The view was great, but in the beginning there was little food—and so much work to do. As one pioneering nun exclaimed: "We felt like true missionaries since we lacked food!"

The sisters met the first boatload of lepers that arrived on May 27, 1906. The second batch arrived two months later on July 4. The first year was hard as there was only one doctor whose administrative duties left him little time for the patients. The sisters had to fill in the gap, doing even amputations and minor dental work. They spoke mostly French and a little English and had no knowledge of the local languages.

Other problems were lack of personnel, medical facilities and supplies and the constant threat of beri-beri. Nature was not always at its best. The sisters experienced a strong typhoon in 1910 and a landslide in 1916.

But something graver concerned the sisters. The forced separation of the patients from their families and life as virtual exiles brought extreme loneliness. The marriage ban at that time and the loose separation of the sexes posed a problem. There was a rise in illegitimate births.

The nuns formed the Children of Mary and worked for suitable housing for the women. Still, strict separation gave rise to restiveness among the patients. The sisters had to bear the situation until the marriage ban was lifted in 1910.

Marriages gave birth to new problems. What to do with the offspring of leprosy parents who could not care for them? And when the Culion authorities wanted to send the children declared clean to Manila, their parents protested.

In 1916, the authorities decided to build a nursery in Culion for children born to leprosy parents. The SPC nuns would run the nursery to which the babies were brought right after birth. "We wrapped the babies with only their faces showing for their mothers to see," recalled a nun.

Even the nuns had to exercise strict hygiene. Those who worked with the patients had to step on a disinfecting solution and change clothes before entering the nursery.

The parents could view their children through glass panels in the nursery. There was no physical contact. Sometimes an attendant would provide a small gift for a child, hang it on a stick that would breach the divide. It was heartbreaking. More so when toddlers, not used to seeing patients, suddenly saw, through the glass, the deformed faces of their parents. Many would cower in fear and say, "Kakatakot." (Fearsome).

The tar baby

proven exactly that: too zany to work.

Now, like some folksy Uncle Remus (the character in "Song of the South" who tells the Brer Rabbit fables) sitting in the caboose watching all the fuss, some of the President's allies decided to tell the story of the tar baby and convinced the powers-that-be that Charter change through a people's initiative is an unwinnable fight. You don't need a bullet train, the old PNR engine will do. Rev it up enough, and it will smash its way through anything in its path. And while perhaps the Lambinos and Benzons of the present have invested too much, emotionally or otherwise, in the vain hope of making their bullet train fly, they can be left trying while the pros try something else. It's like a variation on a math problem: If engine A leaves station 1, traveling to point B at 20 kph, and engine B leaves station 2, traveling to point B at 10 kph, which engine will arrive at point B first? The correct, political answer is: It doesn't matter. The government owns both engines, so whichever one gets there first can be proclaimed a win-win triumph of transportation. The Strong Republic railroad.

Just the other day, a foreign journalist interviewing me for a series on the political situation remarked, in between takes, "You know, I've been trying to get hold of a government spokesman but no one is replying."

I told him that perhaps the government was still formulating its message. He said that was quite possible.

The new message is being broadcast loud and clear: It's the Dagupan Express all the way! The Charter change express has shifted engines, that's all. And it's good to consider, at this point, what some versions of the tar baby fable have as their ending. Having been taunted by the fox, Brer Rabbit recovers his wits, begs the fox to throw him into a briar patch, and the sadistic fox complies, not realizing the rabbit can handle the thorny leaves and he can't chase him through the briars. Brer Rabbit gets thrown into the briar patch and has the last laugh.

So who is Brer Rabbit, who is Brer Fox, and who is the tar baby? It depends on whom you ask. I happen to think Brer Rabbit is the President, Brer Fox is the Speaker, and the tar baby is the public and its hostility to the so-called people's initiative. Then again, our Loony Tunes political situation means the big players, at various points in time, play the role of the rabbit and the fox—at times all fight and bluff, at other times, engaging in crafty cunning and plotting. And every one of them, at whichever time they want to play the fox, can create as many tar babies as they please. And each time they decide to be the rabbit, they expect to outwit the fox. And as for you and me—well, sometimes one has to be thankful for the tar babies.

Whether we're watching the Brer rabbits or foxes and their tar baby games, you have to wonder how that will affect your reality. Looking at that shiny, noisy but useless "people's initiative" sitting dead in its tracks, makes you wonder how much of our taxes went to what is a spectacularly failed experiment. And watching the happy face of the Speaker as he wets his whistle, you have to wonder, too: Will that Dagupan Express remove the stones and dirt, the cracked and uneatable grains, from NFA rice at P15 to P20 a kilo? What's cheap shouldn't necessarily be of inferior quality. And at P5.50 to P6.50 a pack, instant noodles are more affordable and cleaner than what the government can provide.

And that's the true moral of the tale: a constitution doesn't provide edible rice. People do. But if they're wrestling tar babies, well...

WHAT WAS ORCHESTRATED ALONG THE lines of Lenei Reifenshtal's propaganda masterpiece "Triumph of the Will" (her film of the 1934 Nuremberg rally of the Nazis) has turned into a scene straight out of Walt Disney's "Song of the South," in particular, the fable of Brer Rabbit and the Tar Baby, in which a fox gets the goat of a rooster but rather vain rabbit by setting up a baby made of tar along the side of the road. The rabbit, spotting the tar baby, tries to strike up a conversation, and gets frustrated over the tar baby's silence. The rabbit tries to beat up the tar baby, but with every kick and punch, he gets more and more stuck until the fox comes out and taunts the rabbit. The lesson, of course, is that you shouldn't mess with something you have no business with in the first place.

Charter change, as originally scripted, was supposed to result in the intimidating yet seductive spectacle of a population rising up to reclaim democracy. It was going to be breathtaking and unstoppable. It was like putting a Japanese bullet train on Philippine National Railways tracks. Pull the train whistle all you like, make all the speeches in the world, bring out the brass bands, publish all the glossy timetables you desire, and still, the result is what we have: cash and saliva don't a popular initiative make; popularity does. And it simply wasn't—and isn't—popular enough. The Sigawng Bayan bullet train was all about shouting and found itself stuck in time-tested tracks. Now it is being subjected to what real-world PNR trains regularly endure: an assault from the public.

From the start, everyone from the stationmaster down to the locomotive driver and conductor were told it simply wouldn't work: the Constitution is like our narrow-gauge railroad tracks and putting a shiny bullet train there was an exercise in futility. Perhaps the President hoped, and some of her people promised, that the train would magnetically, or even magically, levitate over the tracks, perhaps they read "The Little Engine That Could" once too often, but reality has a harsh way of intruding into zany schemes and the people's initiative has

Working abroad should be one of the many available options

THIS IS IN SUPPORT OF INQUIRER's position and recommendation regarding the plight of our overseas Filipino workers. ("A politician's gift," PDI, 5/12/06)

Indeed, it is the duty of the government to provide protection for its migrant workers and to negotiate pro-migrant agreements with OFW-host countries like Saudi Arabia. This is imperative to prevent the oppression and maltreatment of our modern-day heroes.

As the Arroyo administration pushes Filipino workers to go abroad so that they can feed their families and bring stability to our economy, it should pursue as well a parallel mechanism to protect them.

Unfortunately, after more than three decades of state-promoted migration, the Philippine government's performance in forging pro-migrant bilateral labor agreements with labor-receiving countries remains poor; until now, it has a zero batting average. Worse, its negotiating power is limited to lowering the minimum standards of protection and benefits of migrant workers in order to make the hiring of Filipino workers more attractive to labor-receiving countries.

This is not to mention the inability of the government to fully address the many problems besetting our OFWs, such as rape, maltreatment, contract violations, rampant illegal recruitment, trafficking and the social costs of migration.

The release of several hundreds jailed OFWs in Saudi Arabia may be a cause for celebration, but at the same time it should prompt our legislators and law enforcers to rethink our policy on migration and to work for an economy that can provide gainful and sustainable local jobs to our millions of unemployed Filipino workers.

Working abroad should be just one of the options; it should not be the only option for our intelligent and industrious people.

Appearances do not make or unmake a crime

TO PARAPHRASE C.S. LEWIS, nowadays, crime is not committed in dark, seedy alleys by suspicious-looking gangsters but in well-lit offices by neat-looking men in crisp shirts with clean fingernails. This is what makes evil all the more alluring—and harder to detect.

In real life, an obvious distinction of what good and bad really look like doesn't exist. This is the lesson we get, looking at the clean-shaven and—let's say it—good-looking soldiers in the Subic rape case.

Rape, however, does not choose appearances—the victim's or the rapist's. The victim will not always look like an alluring princess caught in a high tower, and the devil will not always have dirty hair, sinister eyes and horns to match. Rape is not a crime of lust or passion. It is first and foremost a crime of aggression and it chooses no one—whether beautiful, desirable or not. Rape is about domination. The thrill one gets out of it is the kick of establishing power.

Just because a rapist has a "tame appearance," is "gentle and soft-spoken," celebrates birthdays, and/or has a family—as the news story "Fr. Reuter presents the 'other side' of the accused" (PDI, 4/29/06) shows—does not mean he is incapable of misdeeds or heinous crimes.

But as one lawyer of the case said: "The public should know that even though they look like tame puppies, they raped and abused a Filipina, treated her like a pig and threw her on the road. That is what they did. Let's not be fooled by looks."

We should remember that it's the victim who is on the losing end. In fact, in rape cases, we should believe the woman precisely because it takes a lot of guts for her to even come out to a skeptical world and proclaim what has been done to her.

An 80-year-old American priest of high stature "liking" these soldiers should not divert public focus against what these men really did, or are accused of doing. What happens in this country, as in all patriarchal societies, however, is that it is the woman who is made to prove her "innocence" and "purity." It is as if she is the one tried and at fault. Her character, her habits, her work are scrutinized: "She is a prostitute, she wanted it, why did she even drink with them?" Her accusers, on the other hand, are presented as clean and meek lambs. Now, that is the imbalance. Now, that is using media for propaganda.

These American soldiers are using Fr. James Reuter's reputation so that we can turn a blind eye to what they have been accused of doing. Our first responsibility is to give justice to the Filipina woman who also has a human face, a loving family, a birthday and a name.

Marriage of convenience between dynasties and oligarchs

THIS IS A REACTION TO Manuel L. Quezon III's column "What's in it for you?" (PDI, 5/4/06) Are we harping on the wrong side of the issues here? The Philippine political system is nothing but a marriage of convenience between the political dynasties and the Filipino oligarchs. Nothing more.

The year MLQ III was born, the Filipinos were standing in long queues to buy gas and rice, and I did a stint inside Fort Bonifacio pulling talabih grass for violating the curfew. I was out late that night working for an P8-a-day job. Since then, I haven't seen yet any great advances or changes in our political system that I can admire. Have there been any changes at all in our political system aside from the removal of the "dysfunctional" and their replacement with "incompetents"?

We're in a quagmire. (1) Unless the upper crust of the Filipino society and the Filipino taipans cut the umbilical cord connecting them to political cronyism, and then sincerely join Juan de la Cruz's fight against poverty, the same political situation will prevail in our country. (2) Unless the Filipinos renounce and turn away from institutionalized corruption, our country's political system will not change.

It is not politics which is corrupt. It is the citizens who corrupt it. Where are we headed to?

'Spoon wars'

I AM A CANADIAN WORKING in the Philippines. I have been here for a while now and I still have a while to go. I have been reading the Inquirer every day since my arrival and have been keeping abreast on this so-called "issue" of "The Spoon Wars."

The statement of the Montreal teacher was in every way "out of line." I cannot imagine the ramifications that it has had on her school and that of the Canadian schooling system. Acts of racism are not permitted in Canada in any form or from anyone. This probably would not have happened if the teacher had known that the use of spoon is a culturally distinct Filipino practice.

Most Canadians are neither white nor big-nosed snobs, contrary to what the May 14 Talk of the Town cartoon suggested. And as far as actual eating habits go, I must say that we Canadians eat in a variety of ways—with forks and knives, or even with our bare hands when it comes to certain types of food.

I have found during my stay in the Philippines that the eating habits of the Filipino people are far more polite than the average Canadian. So although I deeply disagree with the teacher in Montreal, I think that the issue has been blown out of proportion in the media, to the prejudice of Philippine-Canadian cultural relations.

We all need to understand a few issues here so that we may put this issue to rest and continue to enjoy the warm Philippine-Canadian relations that our two countries have established. We all are human beings. Each one of us is important. But we all make mistakes. And when we do, the best thing we can do is apologize.

We should treat this isolated incident and use it as an opportunity to highlight the positive differences between our two cultures.

The Inquirer's Talk of the Town should have focused on the more pressing concerns of the Filipinos. There are a lot more important things it can talk about on its pages than a spoon.

Injustice at National Dairy Authority

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED NATIONAL Dairy Authority (NDA)-VISAYAS employees, deplore the unjust dismissal of Administrator Salvacion M. Bulatao—"SMB" to all of us at the NDA—from office. It should be emphasized that she was fired for ignoring bidding procedures twice, not for stealing public money.

The first transaction had to do with a consultancy engagement in September 2001. It was necessary to make four milk processing plants more efficient. The plants had been in the hands of dairy cooperatives for around 12 years without any rental being paid to government. Since there was no Filipino dairy engineer or technician in the country at that time, she and her colleagues in the NDA central office saw that hiring a Thai consultant who was in the country would save money for the government. The staff of NDA Operations and Finance and Administration endorsed the transaction. The Commission on Audit subsequently cleared the transaction.

Barely a month in the organization then, SMB had to trust the system and go for results with the greatest impact on the industry, the dairy enterprises and on the NDA as a government-owned and controlled corporation. Today, all those plants are covered with lease-purchase contracts, the NDA is collecting rent and the enterprises are operating the plants at a profit.

The second transaction had to do with a contract with McCann-Erickson. As a result of the engagement—facilitated by no less than the author of the National Dairy Development Act of 1995, then Sen. Leticia R. Shahani—the local dairy industry had its first set of professionally crafted promotion materials (including a TV commercial with Ogie Alcasid who appeared probono and the Original Pilipino Milk logo that has been adopted as the quality symbol of local milk producers).

Today, although the dairy sector is small, it is regarded as one of the achievers in the Department of Agriculture. SMB has been a dedicated, effective and honest technocrat. Records show that, with her at the helm of the NDA, the agency consistently grew.

As Marcus Buckingham says, the only things that leaders have in common is that they break all the rules. John Maxwell adds, "Great leaders don't just buy into what everybody else is saying, and they don't follow the beaten (and in the case of government processes, often obsolete) path. Great leaders are constantly creating their own conditions for success by blazing new trails." This SMB has done.

We truly believe in SMB's integrity as a government servant and as an effective leader, and we hope that the powers-that-be review SMB's case and do right by her. We likewise suggest that a review be made on existing government procurement processes and rules, many of which in fact are not effective in preventing corruption. Further, some rules or processes are no longer relevant and actually slow down a nation aching for faster development.

PPI is a solvent company

I WOULD LIKE TO CLARIFY Alcuin Papa's report "Distressed pre-need firm would sell plans." (PDI, 5/10/06)

Pacific Plans Inc. (PPI) has stopped selling open-ended educational plans way back in 1992 or 10 years before the Securities and Exchange Commission banned pre-need companies from doing so. I think what was not stated in the report was that PPI would only sell fixed-value educational plans, alongside with its other products such as fixed-value memorial and fixed-value pension plans.

The trust funds of these plans, which amount to P9.38 billion, exceed its total actuarial reserve liabilities of P8.95 billion. And the fact that the court has ordered an immediate approval of their (deniers) license and the SEC is poised to do so (PDI, 12/12/05) means only one thing: PPI is a solvent company and is, therefore, capable of paying planholder benefits.

I, too, enrolled my three children in PPI educational plans. But these are fixed-value plans. As a planholder, I believe that the company exists to serve Filipinos here and abroad, and if it is allowed to sell these plans, I am confident that the company can deliver on their future obligations.

Banning PPI from selling fixed-value plans would compromise the servicing of more than 400,000 fixed-value planholders as against the 32,000 open-ended planholders.

Mayor in murder tries to leave RP

By Nikko Dizon

A TOWN MAYOR WAS STOPPED FROM LEAVING THE country yesterday after his name was placed on the Bureau of Immigration watch list in connection with the murder of a publisher in Aurora province last year.

Dingalan Mayor Jaime Ylarde was booked on Philippine Airlines (PAL) flight PR 300 for Hong Kong that was set to leave at 8 a.m. from the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (Naia) Centennial Terminal yesterday.

But immigration officers told Ylarde he cannot leave because he was on the BI watch list.

Ylarde was not detained because there was no warrant for his arrest, according to Ferdinand Sampol, head supervisor of the BI-Naia.

Sampol said Ylarde did not protest his inclusion in the watch list and simply left the airport.

The mayor also did not mention the purpose of his trip abroad, Sampol added.

Only last week, state prosecutors found probable cause to charge Ylarde with the murder of Philip Agustin, the editor and publisher of the weekly Starline Times Recorder.

The resolution was received by Agustin's family as they marked his first death anniversary last May 10.

Agustin, 54, was gunned down inside his daughter's home after he delivered copies of his weekly in Dingalan, Aurora.

Agustin had been critical of Ylarde, a former policeman, in his columns.

The weekly also carried stories alleging that Ylarde had profited from the calamity funds received by the town in the wake of a landslide that killed hundreds in 2004.

Agustin was the fourth Filipino journalist killed since the start of 2005.

Last Tuesday, reporter Albert Orsolino was gunned down in Caloocan City.

Relatives of Agustin have appealed for justice on the first anniversary of his murder that has remained unsolved like the cases of 38 other Filipino journalists killed in the last five years.

Nenita Mendoza, sister of the slain Starline Times Recorder publisher Philip Agustin, said the family was expecting a "fair resolution" from the new panel of prosecutors assigned by Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez in March.

"We have waited long and all that we expect is a fair resolution," Mendoza said.

She said they wanted Dingalan Mayor Jaime Ylarde included in the charges as the "mastermind" in Agustin's slay.

A previous resolution, which came on the eighth month of the preliminary investigation, excluded Ylarde from among the suspects but recommended his further investigation by the police and the National Bureau of Investigation.

Relatives of Agustin as well as his friend, Dingalan Councilor Valentino Lapuz, had contested the Jan. 26, 2006 resolution and sought the relief of Senior State Prosecutor Emmanuel Velasco. With a report from Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

1,000 Luisita workers want to own lots through CARP

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO—AT least 1,103 farm workers at the Hacienda Luisita in Tarlac have signed a petition seeking individual ownership of lots at the Cojuangco-family owned estate.

The farmers' group Farmworkers Agrarian Reform Movement-Hacienda Luisita (Farm-Luisita), submitted the 75-page petition to the Department of Agrarian Reform in Quezon City on Tuesday, according to Renato Lalic, Farm-Luisita secretary general.

The government has placed 14,874 hectares of the sugar estate under the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Program.

Farm-Luisita went ahead with the petition even as the Kilusang Magbubukid ng Pilipinas, Alyansa ng Manggagawang Bukid sa Asyenda Luisita and United Luisita Workers Union—which led the agrarian strike at the hacienda from November 2004 to November 2005—asserted a collective mode of ownership over the property to ensure long-term possession by tillers.

The petition also went on despite an earlier policy announcement by Agrarian Reform Undersecretary Narciso Nieto Jr. that the estate, which is covered by five titles, would be collectively owned by the beneficiaries through a Certificate of Land Ownership Awards.

Lalic said the signatories are legitimate farm workers living in three villages on the Concepcion, Tarlac, side of the estate. He said the farmers meet the qualification set by Section 22 of Republic Act 6657 or the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Law of 1988.

The Hacienda Luisita Inc. does not want changes in the form of land ownership, insisting that they retain the stock distribution option (SDO) scheme. The HLI questioned before the Supreme Court the cancellation of the SDO by the DAR and the Presidential Agrarian Reform Council.

In their letter to Agrarian Reform Secretary Nasser Pangandaman, the farm workers said they "voluntarily signed" the petition.

It was endorsed by Lalic, Farm-Luisita Chair Noel Mallari and chapter presidents Manuel Bulatao in Barangay Parang, Roger Amurao in Barangay Pando and Victor Cordero in Barangay Mabilog.

"Farm workers would have full control of the land only through the distribution of lands to them," the officers said in a letter. Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

BIR exec who flunked lifestyle check gets promotion

COTABATO CITY—A RANKING REVENUE officer here, who recently flunked a lifestyle check, had been promoted.

In his order dated May 10, Revenue Commissioner Jose Mario Buñag told Mama Marzoc, director of the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) district office 18 here, to report to Cagayan de Oro City.

Buñag said the reassignment was a promotion for Marzoc. Seven other revenue officials were also named to higher positions through the same order.

Marzoc was being accused of amassing unexplained wealth during his 37 years in the government service. He allegedly owns several pieces of real estate property. He denied any wrongdoing and maintained he was being framed up.

Marzoc said he was vindicated by the promotion brought about by his "good tax collection performance."

Under the latest BIR order of assignment, Marzoc will formally replace Araceli Francisco on May 24. Francisco was being reassigned to the BIR district office 9 in San Pablo City.

Marzoc's vacated post here will be taken over by Mustapha Gandarosa, BIR central office executive assistant for policy and planning service.

Other officers promoted were BIR-9 director Corazon Pangcog of San Pablo City, who will act as officer in charge and assistant commissioner at the central office in Manila; excise large taxpayers division executive assistant Elvira Vera as new head of the BIR's policy and planning service; and collection enforcement division chief Teresita Angeles, who was named acting chief of the excise large taxpayers division.

From acting executive assistant at the taxpayers' assistance service, director Aida Simborio will take over as acting assistant commissioner for taxpayers assistance while chief revenue officer Erlinda Pengosro, of Baguio City, will be the acting director for the Cordillera Autonomous Region, which is also based in Baguio City. Charlie Señase, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Owwa exec suspended on molestation complaint from OFW

By Carla P. Gomez
PDI Visayas Bureau

BAOLOC CITY—AN OVERSEAS Workers Welfare Administration (Owwa) official in Saudi Arabia has been suspended pending investigation of allegations that he molested a female Overseas Filipino Worker (OFW) who sought his help in February.

Owwa chief Marianito Roque said Ed Esguerra, Owwa counselor based in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, had been recalled to the Philippines to serve his suspension and to face the complaint filed by an OFW from Negros Occidental.

"We will let due process take its course," Roque told the INQUIRER in a phone interview.

Roque said he filed the administrative case against Esguerra based on the complaint filed by the OFW at the Philippine Embassy in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

"The Negrense did not want to sign her complaint under oath so I had to be the one to file the complaint," he added.

Roque said he met with the OFW while in Saudi Arabia and acted on her complaint. "We took care of her and placed her in a halfway house."

Esguerra was immediately recalled and suspended, he added.

The OFW accused Esguerra, who is in his 50s, of molesting her in February when she sought his help after fleeing from her Arab employer who had been making sexual advances.

"I would like to express my disappointment and disgust over what happened. I was able to thwart the sexual advances of my Arab employer ... but I fell into the hands of a fellow Filipino who just took advantage of me," she said in an affidavit executed at the Philippine Embassy in Riyadh.

In her affidavit, the OFW said she had been working as a domestic helper for Ahmed Ibrahim Dobis in Doha, Dhahran, since 2004.

Kathy said Dobis tried to molest her a number of times but she was able to thwart his sexual advances. But last Feb. 2, she decided to run away.

She sought the help of a domestic helper and driver of a neighboring house in Doha who contacted Esguerra for assistance.

Kathy said she was brought by her companions to a shopping center in Khobar where she was fetched by Esguerra. They got into a white vehicle driven by a certain Alex.

Upon reaching the Polo Building, Esguerra allegedly brought her to a room on the second floor, which she said had a big bed, red sofas, a side table and a big cabinet.

According to her statement, her description resembled the room occupied by Esguerra at Room 2008 in Polo Building.

It was inside the room where the Owwa officer allegedly made his sexual advances.

Kayaking around Mindoro in 18 days

By Madonna T. Virola
San Jose, Occidental Mindoro

AT 7:40 PM. ON April 22, three men landed on the shores of Barangay San Roque I in San Jose, Occidental Mindoro, putting their paddles to rest after 18 days of navigating the island's contours.

Eric M. Ramirez, Immanuel "Iman" Peñaflor and Ariel "Taboy" Bacason began their voyage on April 5 in the same place, focused on their mission to become the first to circle Mindoro in solo kayaks.

The Mindoro Kayaking 2006 Expedition, as they called themselves, is a bonding of three individuals of disparate pursuits.

Ramirez, 34, is a US migrant on vacation in Mindoro, his birthplace. A licensed nurse in New Jersey, although he finished aeronautical engineering at the PATTS School of Aeronautics in Manila, he left the island for the United States in 1993.

His friend from way back in college in Manila, Peñaflor, 38, is a successful furniture maker. He earned his Associate in Electrical Engineering degree at the Feati University.

Bacason, 33, is a gardener at a beach resort, a last-minute replacement for an original team member who had backed out.

Preparations

With Ramirez leading the adventure, the group consumed one year and a half to prepare the equipment they would need.

Into "paraw" (native outrigger boat) sailing after a two-year training in Aldan's Boracay, he voraciously read books and other materials on kayaking. He visited kayak shows in New Jersey and sent a sample of a kayak to Peñaflor for him to copy for the Mindoro adventure.

Propelled by double-bladed paddles, modern kayaks trace their origins to the native boats used in Alaska as early as 4,000 years ago, according to archaeologists.

The sleek, elongated boats were the seacraft of choice by the three who were out for an adventure.

To call the kayak trio a "cruising" troop would be an understatement as travel around the island in this type of boat requires astute maneuvering skills in waters they had just begun to explore.

The group said they prepared for two tough areas, one of them off Calavite at the northwestern tip, where the waves were normally about one meter high. "There was a point where we couldn't see each other," they said.

The other area was Borongkaan at the boundary of the two Mindoro provinces south of the island.

Exploration

Ramirez said he didn't know Mindoro well and that exploring the island gave him the feeling he was out to conquer a familiar yet unknown territory.

On Day 5, he saw a wild duck sanctuary at the Pinagbarahan River, between Sta. Cruz and Mamburao. Two days later, they marvelled at the waterfalls cascading from the mountain to the sea at Itbo, Calavite. They saw Mangyan children paddling in the open sea.

At Mananaw, Paluan, the next day, Peñaflor met natives who sold pebbles for a living and got acquainted with residents of Basil, Abra de Ilog, on the following day.

Day 9 was Holy Thursday. The group observed strong winds and hesitated to continue their trip. The people offered them a hut for shelter, steamed rice and liquor as night capper.

Wrong turn

It was a memorable Good Friday. The kayakers made a wrong turn from Calavite and Paluan in Occidental Mindoro toward Puerto Galera as they maneuvered against the wind.

Ramirez saw Bacason paddling fiercely but staying on the same spot. He rushed toward Bacason, who was about five miles away, but saw him drifting away from track.

"I thought Taboy's kayak overturned, but I realized he was not even worried," he said, proud of his teammate whose presence of mind boosted the group's morale.

At this time, their kayaks were almost destroyed by big waves that pushed them to the shores. When Ramirez's kayak went upside down, the three decided to take a break at a resort in Apyas, Abra de Ilog on Day 11.

'Gift from heaven'

White Beach in Puerto Galera "was like a gift from heaven." It relaxed their sore and aching muscles. Ramirez said he would have wanted to indulge in snorkeling but missed the chance because of fever.

In Punta Beach, San Teodoro on Day 12, Easter Sunday, the group was offered small cottages for P500 by a group of women and several men already intoxicated with native liquor. The price was eventually lowered to P300.

On Day 16, the journeymen encountered wind gusts that gave them a difficult time kayaking in Roxas, Oriental Mindoro. "The waves came from different directions, unlike those in Calavite where waves were only [coming from] one direction," they said.

They decided to take a siesta and went videoke singing with the people at Dalahican Beach Resort.

The next day, they were greeted by barangay tanod (village guards) in a Mangyan-populated island community called Dangkalan in Bulalacao, the southernmost town of Oriental Mindoro.

Peñaflor said he could not forget the Mangyan in g-string who asked for his mobile phone number, saying he might be able to go to Manila and could call him up.

Insights

The local residents at various points of the trip gave the group a glimpse of how they have been eking out a living in the coastal communities. Some were fishermen engaged in dynamite fishing, while others were farmers clearing the mountains.

One man leaves his house at dawn to fish, only to return several hours later with just a single small catch to offer his wife waiting on the shore.

On the last day, the trio doubled their sails to 50 miles because of a desire to be home immediately. Why should we prolong the trip?

What they brought along

4 paddles, 3 life vests, 1 six-person tent, 3 sleeping bags, 3 bilge pumps to siphon off water, foam, a global positioning system compass, map, survival kit (2-liter container, signal mirror, whistle and saw), nylon fishing line and hook, condom (for emergency water), lancets and mini flashlight, corned beef, dried meat, sardines, Power bars (energy bars packed with complex carbohydrates with high calorie content), mobile phone, head lamp, battery-powered lamp, underwater camera, machete, rope, silverware, soap, clothes, sun block lotion, insect repellent, pots and pans, sponge, camping stove, shower bag with drinking water container, mattress, pair of binoculars, dry bags, lots of plastic bags, and waterproof gear.

Home sweet home

As they neared their last stop, they kept thinking of their experiences and how they all began. Nothing would compare to the sight of the shoreline, their final stop, they said.

"When I saw the shoreline with my head bump, I raised my paddle and swam toward our families, about 20 of them," Ramirez said.

"We were very excited to go home as we missed our families so much."

Their families did not know the details of the expedition and were told of their arrival only on the final day by Ramirez's mother while they were still in Alibug, Magsaysay, some 25 miles away.

They also did not even know it was Earth Day.

Mining town reinvents itself

By Gerald Gene R. Querubin
Sta. Cruz, Marinduque

THE FORMER COPPER mining town of Sta. Cruz in Marinduque is trying to reinvent itself as a tourism destination.

Blessed by pristine beaches, scenic nature spots, and historical landmarks, the former mining site of Marinduque Copper Mining Corp. (Marcopper) is 150 km south of Manila, which makes it more accessible to tourists than Boracay, Cebu or Palawan.

The first-class municipality (average annual income: P35 million or more over the past three years) is the premier destination of the heart-shaped island-province.

As the seafood capital of Marinduque, Sta. Cruz yields an abundant harvest of "dilis" or "bulinao" (small fish), the kind being bought by "bagoong" (salted fish paste) makers from as far as Pangasinan. It celebrated its first seafood festival on May 1-3.

Beaches

The main showcase of Sta. Cruz is the Palo Maria Beach in Barangay Maniwaya. The white-sand beach with clean, clear waters is regarded as one of the finest in the country.

Tourists will discover there first-class amenities still untampered by gaudy commercialism. They can also leave behind their "insignia" of footprints on the other beaches, such as the pebbled Dapdap and Maligaya.

Dapdap Beach in Barangay Tagum is a 30-minute jeepney ride from the poblacion, while Maligaya Beach in Barangay Morales is a 45-minute jeepney ride.

Other beaches are the Kalangkang and Biga.

Island-villages also boast of scenic beaches. Polo has Aroma Beach, a 15-minute ride by motorboat from Buyabod Port, which is now frequented by visitors because of its nearness to the town proper.

Mongpong Island is another gem of a find because of its white beaches.

Waterfalls

A refreshing choice for visitors are the Kawa-Kawa Falls in Barangay Banguangan, the Bagakawa Falls in Barangay Tambangan, and the Altar Falls in Barangay De Villa.

They, however, need not look far because Sta. Cruz has waterfalls right within the poblacion. From where they are staying, they can walk for 5-10 minutes to the Busay Falls, complete with dipping pools

GETTING THERE

By land: From Manila, take a JAC Liner from Edsa/Kamias/Cubao station. A bus that travels directly to Sta. Cruz, Marinduque charges P500 one-way.

Or take any bus (JAC Liner, JAM Liner or Dela Rosa Liner) going to Talao-Talao Port in Lucena City. From there, fastcraft and ferry boats go to Buyabod port in Sta. Cruz, or to Cawit Boac or Balanacan port, Mogpog. From Cawit or Balanacan, vans or jeeps travel to Sta. Cruz.

There are also vans that travel from Manila to Talao-Talao.

By air: Aslan Spirit offers regular flights four times a week to Gasan Airport. Travel time is approximately 45 minutes from Manila. Public shuttle vehicles are available to passengers headed for various destinations.

Busay is less than a kilometer from the Sta. Cruz Parish Church, the oldest church in the town center.

Built in 1760, it houses centuries-old religious sculptures and the wide-paneled "retablos" at the center and the sides.

Less than five minutes of tricycle ride from the church is the centuries-old Baluarte or watch tower in Barangay Lapu-Lapu, which was once used by natives to spot and ward off possible attacks by pirates.

Caves

Tourists can visit the Bathala Caves System in Barangay Ipil, a 20-minute ride from the town proper. Inside the caves are wonderful stalactites, stalagmites and other natural rock formations. Thousands of guano-producing bats inhabit the place.

In one of the caves, guests can marvel at the "enchanted" pythons guarding it. The more adventurous, however, can wade in waist-deep waters of the Bathala's River Cave.

For nature lovers, the municipality offers areas for hiking, trekking and trail biking.

"Visitors would marvel not only at its beaches, scenic spots and historical landmarks but also at the low-cost food and accommodations," said Mayor Percival Morales.

Since the beaches of Sta. Cruz have not been commercialized yet, visitors can stay overnight through the "home stay program" implemented by the Provincial Tourism Office.

They can stay in houses near the beaches. The more adventurous may bring their camping gear and pitch tents on the beach. However, making bonfires or cooking at the beach is discouraged.

Hotels and lodging houses can be found at the town proper.

The origin of the Opus Dei: 'God's Marines'

OPUS DEI—LATIN FOR "THE work of God"—is a relatively small group of roughly 85,000 Catholics, mostly lay men and women but including clergy as well, founded in 1928 in Madrid, Spain, by St. Josemaria Escriva.

Opus Dei arose from the ferment in European Catholicism of the early 20th century, alarmed by the growing gap between the Church and the secular world. It was one of many new forms of life in Catholicism designed to "evangelize" secularity, meaning to bring the message of the gospel to the modern street.

Escriva's vision was to form a corps of lay men and women who would then bring Christianity into the boardrooms, parlaments, lecture halls and newsrooms of the modern world. It would be the laity, not the clerical caste, who would "redeem" secularity.

All of this is expressed in Opus

Dei's core spiritual ideas, the "sanctification of work." Escriva encouraged his followers not to compartmentalize their religious lives, to see their ordinary daily work just as "religious" an activity as going to church on Sunday. Opus Dei numbers 1,850 priests, along with 83,641 laity.

There are three main categories of members—numeraries, who are celibate and live in Opus Dei centers; associates, who are like numeraries but live on their own; and supernumeraries, who are generally married and live with their families. In theory, these are distinctions in one's mode of life, not in level of commitment.

—Excerpts from "What is Opus Dei" by John Allen, author of "Opus Dei: An Objective Look Behind the Myths and Reality of the Most Controversial Force in the Catholic Church."

mind. Harvard, of all places, was where he got snared, so to speak.

There, he met Bernardo Villegas and Placido Mapa who were also doing doctorate studies in economics. All three became drawn to Opus Dei and eventually sought membership—Villegas and Estanislao as numeraries, and Mapa as a supernumerary. The three brought Opus Dei to the Philippines and some parts of Asia and were instrumental in its growth in the region.

Numeraries are lay people who are committed to a life of celibacy, live together in an Opus Dei residence and follow a relatively structured regimen even while practicing their chosen professions in the secular world. They study philosophy and theology as would be required for priesthood.

Supernumeraries are generally married and live with their families. (See sidebar above.)

God's Marines

Numerary comes from the Latin word numerus and has a Roman militaristic origin. Opus Dei members sometimes think of themselves as "God's Marines."

And what attracted Estanislao to "the work"?

"I realized I could remain an economist, that I need not give up being one, while offering everything to God," Estanislao explains. "We have a mission to put God into people's lives while maintaining a personal relationship with God." It is a call, a vocation, he adds.

Opus Dei's Spanish founder, St. Josemaria Escriva (canonized in 2000) was still alive at that time, and Villegas had gone to Barcelona to meet with him. Estanislao later met with Escriva in Mexico.

"He was very interested in the Philippines," Estanislao remembers. "He told me, 'If you leave it up to me I'd like to be buried in the Philippines.'" It was an encounter he would never forget.

Beginnings in RP

Before starting anything, the Harvard boys first had to get the approval of then Manila Archbishop Rufino Cardinal Santos.

The first Opus Dei center for men in Manila was in the compound of the Villegas family in Singalong. It opened in 1964 to students, many of them from De La Salle University.

Estanislao and Villegas, a La Sallite, who had gone through spiritual formation and theological studies, conducted talks and recollections. Joining them later were two Spanish priests of Opus Dei, Fathers Jose Morales and Javier de Pedro, and numerary Jose Rivera, an engineer.

In April 1965 the apostolate moved to a bigger place, the Maynilad Study Center in Malate.

YOUNG NUMERARIES at the Tanglaw Residence in Quezon City are mostly professionals and intellectuals.

CERES DOYO

This would be a venue for education and training for male students and professionals. And of course, for recruitment.

Drawing students

Soon, Opus Dei gained a foothold in the University of the Philippines in Quezon City. To serve that part of Metro Manila, Opus Dei built the Banahaw Cultural Center in 1968. Two more priests arrived to serve the needs of the growing number of male students and professionals.

The women of Opus Dei who arrived in 1965 also built a student residence on Leon Guinto Street in Malate, attracting both students and professionals.

"I was among those who frequently visited the center," says Rosie Tagasan who was taking up statistics at UP in the early 1970s.

"They were always speaking in English and I didn't feel at ease," Tagasan recalls. If that didn't draw her to Opus Dei, the wide array of reading materials did.

Tagasan's visits to the center became more frequent. She did not become a numerary right away and first had to see to it that her widowed mother and younger siblings were economically okay. Financial stability and a good intellect are among the requisites for numeraries.

Although Tagasan's job in a foreign company meant living for many years in Asian countries that were not predominantly Catholic, she didn't have to stop being a numerary and found ways to live out her religious commitment. Not too long ago, she came home for good and became director of the Makiling Conference Center in Calamba, Laguna. She lives in the adjacent residence for female numeraries, a well-appointed one, no doubt, that opens to a lush and wooded area.

Expansion

In August 1967, numeraries Estanislao and Villegas put up the Center for Research and Communication (CRC), a business and economic think tank.

The CRC was to be an instrument that would carry the church to the workplace, so to speak, and impart Catholic teachings to professionals in business, law, journalism, education and other key sectors. Among the early recruits was another Harvard graduate Jose Romero, economist and business journalist, who later became a supernumerary.

In 1995, the CRC became the University of Asia and the Pacific (UA&P) where some 2,000 students are currently enrolled. Its tuition is among the most prohibitive. Its campus is in the heart of the Ortigas business center in Pasig. Villegas had served as university president.

Despite its big chapel with a grand gilded altar decorated with renaissance-style paintings (a trademark of Opus Dei chapels), and the regular presence of Opus Dei priests for daily Masses and confessions, UA&P is not a Catholic school.

This is what Antonio Torralba, dean of UA&P's College of Arts and Sciences, wants to point out. UA&P is not a member of the Catholic Educational Association of the Philippines. But doctrinal soundness in the courses and pastoral work in the campus are entrusted to members of Opus Dei, Torralba adds.

Values education is very prominent in the curriculum and other activities for the youth, Torralba adds. When the INQUIRER visited Opus Dei-affiliated Balet Farm School in Batangas, Torralba was there with young UA&P graduates giving seminars on love and sexuality.

"Okay, UA&P is an Opus Dei flagship," numerary and Opus Dei information officer Conrado Ma. Ricafort concedes when pressed to explain the seeming hesitancy among members to get their institutions labeled as Catholic and Opus Dei.

He adds that to further the Church's mission to sanctify and evangelize, members, parents especially, put up foundations that run schools and centers, the chaplaincy of which is entrusted to Opus Dei.

Among these are Woodrose School for girls and Southridge School for boys in posh Ayala-Alabang. Parents have also established schools in Quezon City, Cebu and Iloilo.

Opus Dei institutions that are run as corporate projects—20 study centers, eight cultural development centers for professionals, three retreat/seminar houses, one university and five professional training centers for women.

Schools run by Opus Dei members—eight grade schools and high schools, three vocational-technical schools for men and five farm schools.

Ricafort says that running training centers for the poor and out-of-school youth are the members' way of applying the social teachings of the Church and its "preferential option for the poor."

While readers worldwide devoured the novel, reaction from Cannes critics ranged from mild endorsement of its pot-boiler suspense to groans of ridicule over its heavy melodrama.

"It's a movie about whether the greatest story ever told is true or not, and it's not the greatest movie ever screened, is it?" said Baz Bamigboye, a film columnist for London's Daily Mail. "As a thriller, well," he continued, struggling.

"Maybe the next day I'll forget about it," said Igor Soukmanov of Unistar Radio in Belarus. "But today for two hours it was good entertainment ... As a Hollywood movie, it's a very nice picture."

Critics got their first look at "The Da Vinci Code" a day before its world premiere at Cannes on Wednesday, when it also debuts at theaters in France and some other countries. The film opens worldwide over the following two days. It opens in the Philippines today.

Directed by Ron Howard, the movie stars Tom Hanks and Audrey Tautou as strangers hurled together on a frantic quest for the Holy Grail after a series of murders is committed.

The filmmakers added some twists and variations here and there, but the general thrust of the novel remained intact, including its theory that Jesus Christ and Mary Magdalene were married and had a child, which has prompted denouncements from many Christians.

Restless audience

The Cannes audience clearly grew restless as the movie dragged on to two and a half hours and spun a long sequence of anticlimactic revelations.

"I kept thinking of the Energizer Bunny, because it kept going and going and going, and not in a good way," said James Rocchi, a film critic for CBS 5 television in San Francisco and the online outlet Cinemacal. "Ron Howard makes handsome films. He doesn't make bad ones, but he doesn't make great ones."

One especially melodramatic line uttered by Hanks drew prolonged laughter and some catcalls, and the audience continued to titter for much of the film's remainder.

Some people walked out during the movie's closing minutes, although there were fewer departures than many Cannes movies provoke among harsh critics. When the credits rolled, there were a few whistles and hisses, and there was none of the scattered applause even bad movies sometimes receive at Cannes.

Critics singled out costar Ian McKellen, playing a wry Grail enthusiast who joins the search, as the movie's highlight, injecting hearty humor and delivering the most nuanced performance. Paul Bettany was cited for adding a seething mix of tragic pathos and destructive zealotry as a monk assassin who carries out the slayings.

Passionate protests

While critics in Cannes responded coolly to the movie, Christian leaders in Asia voiced fears the movie may sour the image of their religion in the region where Christianity is overshadowed by Buddhism, Hinduism and Islam.

The archbishop of Manila, Gaudencio Cardinal Rosales, has denounced both the movie and the novel as an attack on the divinity of Jesus Christ. But he has stopped short of calling for a ban in the predominantly Roman Catholic nation.

Marissa Laguardia, head of the Movie and Television Review and Classification Board (MTRCB), cited the importance of preserving free speech in the Philippines. She said opponents of the film may discourage friends from watching it, but that the movie "has to be shown."

"Otherwise we will be the only country that will not show this film. Thirty-six countries have already reviewed this film and they have not banned it. So are we just out of the Stone Age?" Laguardia said.

The MTRCB approved an adult rating for the movie but stopped short of rating it "X," saying "it does not constitute a clear, express or direct attack on the Catholic Church or religion" and does not libel or defame any person.

Many Christians all over the world consider as blasphemy one of the movie's premises that Jesus Christ married Mary Magdalene and fathered children and that his descendants are still alive.

But Christians in Asia are especially worried that the movie may spread misinformation about their religion, which is a minority faith in many countries of the region.

"If Jesus Christ had a child and a wife, then Christianity would be destroyed," said Thongchai Pradachananurat, of the Thailand Protestant Churches Coordinating Committee.

A coalition of Christian groups in Thailand, which is more than 90 percent Buddhist, demanded that censors cut the last 15 minutes of the movie, which reveal that Jesus' lineage has continued.

The country's censorship board agreed to snip the last 10 minutes, but the movie's maker, Columbia Pictures, has appealed.

Hunger strike

In India, Joseph Dias, head of the Catholic Secular Forum, went on a hunger strike in downtown Bombay to protest the movie's release in his country, where most of the 1 billion population is Hindu.

After receiving more than 200 complaints, India's Information and Broadcasting Minister Priya Ranjan Dasmunshi said he was going to see the movie for himself, which may delay by a day or two the film's scheduled release in the country on Friday.

In South Korea which has 13 million Protestants and 4.6 million Roman Catholics, a court ruled Tuesday that a Christian group's request for an injunction to block screenings lacked merit.

"As it is clear that the novel and movie are all fiction ... there is no probability that the movie can make viewers mistakenly believe the contents of the movie are facts," chief judge Song Jin-hyun said in his ruling.

The Christian Council of Korea, an umbrella group of 63 South Korean Protestant denominations, said it respected the ruling but would lead a boycott of the movie, which it said defiles the sanctity of Jesus Christ and distorts facts.

Strength of faith

In Malaysia where nearly 60 percent are Muslims, Bishop Lim Cheng Ean said the strength of Christian faith alone would counter the movie.

"If Christians know their own faith, they will be strong enough. We can leave it to their discretion as to whether they would rather watch the movie or not. That is their free choice," he said.

Australia's Anglican Church, however, isn't taking any chances. Anglican Sydney Media, which promotes the Sydney diocese, has set up a website and launched movie theater ads challenging theories in the "The Da Vinci Code" book to coincide with the release of the movie version.

Albinos unhappy

In another development, members of the National Organization for Albinism and Hypopigmentation in the United States expressed unhappiness with the film's heavy, a monk-assassin, being an albino, as described in the book.

Michael McGowan, an albino who heads the organization, said "The Da Vinci Code" would be the 68th movie since 1960 to feature an evil albino.

The "Da Vinci" character "is just the latest in a long string," McGowan said. "The problem is there has been no balance. There are no realistic, sympathetic or heroic characters with albinism that you can find in movies or popular culture."

House still a millionaire's club

By Michael Lim Ubac

ALL MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, except the five party-list lawmakers, are millionaires.

Based on the lawmakers' Statement of Assets, Liabilities and Net Worth as of Dec. 31, 2005, only party-list Representatives Satur Ocampo, Rafael Mariano, Crispin Beltran, Teodoro Casio and Joel Virador had assets worth less than P1 million.

Mariano, the national chair of the Kilusang Magbubukid ng Pilipinas, was the poorest of them all with no assets and liabilities to speak of.

His total net worth is P18,537.12 representing his monthly salary (P35,000 less tax).

In contrast, Rep. Cynthia Villar, the richest legislator, with P759.8-million in total assets.

She had been on top of the millionaires' list of the House since replacing in 2001 her spouse—then Speaker and now Senator Manuel Villar—as representative of the lone district of Las Piñas.

The summary report was officially released yesterday by Emilia Calonge, director of the House Records Management Division, and Jose Ma. Antonio Tuano, executive director of the House Administrative Management Bureau.

A far second to Villar was President Macapagal-Arroyo's brother-in-law, Ignacio Arroyo of Negros Occidental (P287.5 million), Judy Syjuco of Iloilo (P255 million), Ferjanel Biron of Iloilo (P217.5 million), Rafael Nantes of Quezon (P117.4 million), Edgardo Angara of Aurora (P107 million), Gilbert Teodoro of Pangasinan (P102.6 million), Glenda Ecleo of Surigao del Norte (P94.2 million), Juan Ponce Enrile Jr. of Cagayan (P93.9 million) and Antonio Florendo of Davao del Norte (P92.3 million).

Speaker Jose de Venecia was in 34th slot with P57 million while Minority Leader Francis Escudero placed 177th with P6.9 million.

Pampanga, took the 19th slot with P76.9 million, while then Antipolo Rep. Ronaldo Puno, now interior secretary, was 11th with P89.4 million.

Ironically, 16 of the 21 party-list lawmakers, supposedly representing marginalized sectors, also belonged to the millionaires' club.

Rep. Rene Velarde (Buhay), the son of El Shaddai leader Mike Velarde, was the richest among them with P30.9-million in net worth, followed by Acmad Tomawis (Alyansa ng Indihinong Filipino), Eulogio "Amang" Magsaysay (Alliance of Volunteer Educators), Sunny Rose Madamba (Association of Philippine Electric Cooperative), Joel Villanueva (Citizens' Battle Against Corruption), Edgar Valdez and Ernesto Pablo (Association of Philippine Electric Cooperatives), Florencio "Bem" Noel (An Waray), Christian Señeres of Buhay, Rodante Marcoleta of Alagad, Anna Theresa Hontiveros-Baraquel of Akbayan, Guillermo Cua Coop-Natco, Leonila. Chavez o f Butil, Liza Maza of Gabriela; Loretta Ann Rosales of Akbayan and Renato Magtubo of Partido ng Manggagawa.

Doomed Pinay saved from Saudi beheading

By Volt Contreras and Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

A FILIPINA CONVICTED of murder in Saudi Arabia has been saved from execution through the intercession of President Macapagal-Arroyo, and the victim's family has accepted part of a total of P28 million in blood money, a special presidential envoy announced yesterday.

Sarah Dematera, 34, had been marked for death by decapitation since Nov. 14, 1993, when a Saudi court found the domestic helper guilty of killing her employer's wife, according to a statement issued by Ambassador Amable Aguiluz, special envoy to the Gulf Cooperation Council.

Dematera maintained she was framed in the killing of the woman, which took place at her employers' home four days after she started working in Saudi Arabia in November 1992, the statement said.

The victim's family formally accepted 500,000 Saudi rials (P7 million) as a down payment during a court hearing in Dammam last May 10, the statement said, adding that the equivalent of P2.45 million had been donated by Aguiluz and the rest was contributed by overseas Filipino workers.

Although Aguiluz himself had to negotiate with the victim's family to accept the payment of blood money and set the amount, the statement attributed the sparing of Dematera's life to Ms Arroyo's intercession during her recent visit to Saudi Arabia, where she also obtained pardon for 138 jailed Filipino workers.

The statement said Dematera would be released from prison once the rest of the money is paid, but it did not say where the money would come from.

Meanwhile, nine of the 138 Filipino workers pardoned during Ms Arroyo's visit told the President in a thank-you letter that other foreign workers detained in Saudi Arabia were envious of their good fortune.

"We all clapped while watching you meet with the King and even other foreigners in our detention center also applauded," the workers said in their letter, released by Malacañang yesterday. "When we were told about the King's pardon, an Egyptian detainee and other Indonesian prisoners told us that they wished they were Filipinos so that you can also be their President."

The letter was signed by Rofia U. Saguia, Catherine D. Tonelada, Darwina L. Astare, Rahma U. Sabilla, Lisa P. Martinez, Baida Omar, Saguir M. Unotan, Fedella R. Rapal, and Melania E. Borje.

"Your visit to Saudi Arabia and friendship with King Abdullah made it possible for our release to take place," the letter said.

"We will do our best to explain to our countrymen the cultural and legal differences that workers leaving for Saudi Arabia must always consider and respect," the letter added.

OIC team here on mission

OFFICIALLY, IT'S CALLED A fact-finding mission. Essentially, it's a two-day "road trip" meant to show the Muslim world how much war-torn lives have improved in Mindanao a decade after the Philippine government struck a peace deal with Moro rebels.

The itinerary includes stops in provincial capitols, a mosque, a Shar'ah court house, a sea port, a hospital, and the shores of Lake Lanao for a ceremonial toss of fingerlings.

Upon Malacañang's invitation, a 16-member delegation from the Influential Organization of the Islamic Conference arrived yesterday and will visit several towns and meet local officials in the South, including the old guards of the Moro National Liberation Front.

The team is set to assess the "implementation" of the September 1996 peace agreement between the government and the MNLF, an OIC-backed accord which envisioned autonomy and socio-economic rehabilitation for Mindanao's Muslim populace.

The observers will basically look at both the physical and political infrastructure, the state of the natural resources, and the status of the various development projects in the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao into which billions of dollars in foreign aid or loans have since poured.

"It is a fact-finding mission to evaluate and see on the ground... what was implemented, obstacles impeding the implementation, the complaints of the parties involved, how we (OIC) can help to find ways and means to fully implement (it)," said Ambassador Sayed Kassem El-Massry, adviser to the OIC Secretary and head of the mission.

Vendetta angle eyed in journalist's slay

Gunmen's identities known to cops

By Luige A. del Puerto and Nancy C. Carvajal

POLICE YESTERDAY SAID THE killing of reporter Albert Orsolino was "not media-related."

Director Vidal Querol, National Capital Region police chief, yesterday said personal vendetta could have prompted the attack on the 45-year-old tabloid reporter.

"Right now, investigators are outside Metro Manila working on the angle that the killing was not media-related," he said.

Chief Supt. Leopoldo Bataoil, Northern Police District director, said they had already identified the gunmen as well as the owner of the motorcycle used by the suspects.

He refused to give details, although a check with the records of the Land Transportation Office showed that the motorcycle was registered to a certain Roberto Enrique de Dasmariñas, Cavite.

Querol added that results of the initial investigation indicated that Orsolino's murder might be an "act of vengeance." It could have something to do with his anti-criminality campaign as a barangay official in Caloocan City, he explained.

Without elaborating, Querol said the murder could be linked to the death of a suspected narcotics peddler in the city.

He added that so far, the police had not found anything to show that Orsolino's death was related to his job as a media man.

"We have not seen that he had targeted someone in his writings, unlike the media killings in the provinces," Querol said.

This was supported by Senior Supt. Geronimo Reside, Caloocan chief of police, and head of the group tasked to look into Orsolino's death.

Reside said the killers could have been motivated by "personal vendetta."

Bataoil said he had ordered his men to watch over Orsolino's family round-the-clock. "The wife expressed fear for her safety and that of their five small children ages two to 10," he added.

Orsolino, a reporter of the tabloid Saksi, was the latest in a growing list of murdered journalists since 1986.

Two men on a motorcycle ambushed him on Tuesday near a gas station on C-4 Road in Kaunlaran Village, Caloocan City. Orsolino was on his way to his Malacang beat.

A stray bullet wounded bystander Annie Clemente in the right leg during the attack, police said.

The gunmen fled after exchanging gunfire with operatives of the Department of Transportation and Communication who happened to be passing by the area. One of the suspects was reportedly wounded in the firefight, police said.

Bataoil said witnesses had given police a description of the gunmen, who were spotted near the reporter's house before he was killed. "The suspects were seen changing their clothes minutes after the reporter left onboard his car," he added.

Orsolino was a barangay official and president of the Lupa Homeowners Association. He had come from his house in Phase I Lupa, Tonsuya, Malabon, when he was attacked.

The victim was the 78th journalist killed since 1986, according to the National Union of Journalists of the Philippines.

Flood control program under way in Metro

By Tarra V. Quismundo

THE METROPOLITAN MANILA Development Authority has launched "Oplan Linis Sapa, Iwas Baha," a two-fold program aimed at preventing or reducing flooding in the metropolis with the start of the rainy season.

"Our flood control operations continue throughout the year, but this time, we will also appeal to residents to stop throwing garbage into waterways because that makes our job doubly difficult," said MMDA Deputy Chair Cesar Lacuna.

Under the campaign, MMDA personnel will conduct "cleaning and declogging of silt and debris in creeks, inlets and drainage systems" and other waterways from this month until June. At the same time, they will also conduct an information drive to encourage residents to do their part in preventing floods.

The waterways that will be cleaned up by the MMDA flood control crew are the Antipolo Creek and Estero de Pandacan in Manila, Estero de Tripa de Gallina in Pasay City, the San Juan River in Mandaluyong City, the Taguig-Pateros River, and the Navotas River in Malabon City.

They will also clear of garbage the esteros in Moriones, San Lazaro, Tutuban, San Miguel, Sampaloc, Calubcob, Jacson, Paco and Concordia, all in Manila and the Batasan, Dario and San Vicente creeks in Quezon City.

Pasig gives chocolate factory 1-month extension

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

THE PASIG CITY GOVERNMENT yesterday extended for another month the temporary reopening of a chocolate factory owned by Universal Robina Corp. after the factory complied with antipollution regulations.

"We issued them another temporary lifting order for one month. But the factory will still be under close monitoring," City Environment and Natural Resources Office chief Raquel Naciongayo told the INQUIRER.

She said the chocolate factory in Barangay Bagong Ilog had been using "low sulfur fuel" as well as an "automatic anti-pollution device."

The factory in Barangay Bagong Ilog was closed on April 20 following complaints from nearby residents about the unbearable stench emitted by the plant, causing respiratory and skin illnesses.

Company officials had released a statement questioning the closure order, saying it had "no legal basis."

The plant manufactures popular products like Nips Chocolates, Cream-O and Presto Cream.

Seven days later, the company was allowed to reopen temporarily for 15 days subject for assessment.

As the 15-day temporary reopening lapsed the other day, city officials again held a public hearing with the affected residents and URC officials.

Assessment

The city government finally agreed to allow the company to continue its operations for another month, subject to another round of assessment.

This is not the first time a URC plant in Pasig City was ordered closed for pollution.

In October 2005, the city shut down the company's coffee plant, claiming that the stench had caused dizziness and asthma attacks among residents in Barangay Rosario.

But the coffee plant resumed operations nine days later after complying with the recommendations.

Grenade lobbed at QC school

By DJ Yap

AN UNIDENTIFIED PERSON lobbed a grenade at the Santo Domingo Academy, a private school in Barangay Holy Spirit, Quezon City, at about 3:30 a.m. yesterday.

No one was injured although a dog was hit and killed by shrapnel, while a neighbor's car was damaged as a result of the blast, Batasan Police station commander Supt. Julius Abanes said.

Police are looking into a feud among members of the family who owns the school as a possible angle.

Domingo Canero, owner of Santo Domingo Academy who lives inside the compound, told the police he suspects that one of his own children could be behind the incident, adding that he had received an unsigned death threat on May 15.

Legal battle

The Caneros are entangled in a legal and personal battle over ownership of the school, Abanes said.

Because of the squabble, Canero had asked the Department of Education to close down the school, which offers elementary and secondary schooling, but this only angered his children, he added.

Threats had been verbally exchanged between the school owner and his children over the dispute, Abanes said.

Abanes, however, did not identify Canero's children.

Barangay chair shot dead in Las Piñas

By Jocelyn R. Uy and Luige A. del Puerto

HE WAS JUST A FEW STEPS away from his house, but he never made it home.

Lino de Castro, chair of Barangay Almanza Dos in Las Piñas City, was gunned down by four men in front of his house on Gladiola Street, T.S. Cruz Subdivision, at around 5:45 p.m. Tuesday.

The 44-year-old De Castro suffered at least five gunshot wounds in the face and two on his left chest, said city police chief Supt. Josephus Angan.

One of the suspects, however, was caught by barangay watchmen who rushed to the scene when they heard the gunshots.

Lloyd de la Cruz was charged with murder in the Las Piñas prosecutor's office yesterday.

Witnesses told the police that De Castro was talking to someone in front of his house when four men approached him and shot him several times, Angan said.

Hearing the gunfire, the victim's wife, Julita, ran out of the house and saw her husband lying bloodied on the ground.

"But one of the suspects, holding a gun, prevented her from coming close to her husband," Angan told the INQUIRER.

The suspects fled after the incident but watchmen and bystanders chased them and caught De la Cruz. The three others escaped. Recovered from the suspect was the victim's necklace and a .45-cal pistol. Police found seven empty shells and two slugs at the crime scene.

The motive behind the killing has yet to be determined. But Angan said the victim could have offended some people. "As barangay chair, he addressed many problems in his area such as illegal vending and squatting," Angan said. "He had been very active in these campaigns and these are the things that our investigators are looking into," he added.

No crackdown on smelly drivers, but being neat counts

By Tarra V. Quismundo

NOT ONLY WOULD THEY ATTRACT more customers, they would also look good.

An official of the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority yesterday urged owners and operators of public utility vehicles to encourage their drivers to be more conscious of their personal hygiene.

MMDA Traffic Operations Center Executive Director Angelito Vergel de Dios said that contrary to newspaper reports, they were not going to crack down on smelly drivers and conductors.

"First of all, how are you going to implement that? Will our enforcers go around and smell drivers and conductors one by one?" he asked.

Responsibility

"That's the responsibility of the operators and owners. They can really enforce good grooming among their drivers and that would even be helpful to their business because who would want to ride in a bus with a driver who stinks?" Vergel De Dios told the INQUIRER.

He issued the clarification following reports that the MMDA

REM ZAMORA

DRIVERS who look and smell good have an edge over those who don't practice proper hygiene, says the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority.

had ordered its enforcers to apprehend "unhygienic" drivers.

MMDA chair Bayani Fernando had also denied giving such an order.

"All we can do is remind drivers and conductors that they should not have an offensive smell, that they should not have body odor, bad breath or wear dirty clothes. They should at least be presentable because they are engaged in public service," said Vergel de Dios.

He added that having neat employees could even give bus companies and jeepney operators an edge over their competitors.

Vergel de Dios said the agency has long been promoting good grooming among front liners in the transport industry, particularly by imposing a dress code on drivers.

He said drivers and conductors should wear a shirt with a collar and sleeves instead of a sando, (sleeveless undershirt), pants instead of shorts, and shoes or sandals in place of slippers.

NCRPO head vows to make Metro safe for students

By Edison C. Tandoc Jr.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION Police Office Director Vidal Querol said the police force was ready to make the metropolis not only safe for students but also "conducive to learning" when classes open in June.

"We will make their environment conducive to learning. We will remove all distractions as well as everything that will harass them while they are studying," Querol said during the inauguration of the new Marikina City Police Station on Tuesday afternoon.

Apart from going after robbers preying on students, the police will also crack down on the illegal drug trade as well as forms of gambling like video karera, he added.

Querol estimated at least "two million" students would be trooping back to schools during the opening of classes.

In eastern Metro Manila, the district police have been meeting with school officials to prepare for the enrollment period.

"We have been meeting with school officials since two weeks ago so we may know the problem areas and deploy the necessary number of policemen," Chief Supt. Charlemagne Alejandrino, Eastern Police District director, told the INQUIRER.

He said they would be keeping an eye on at least 72 public and 82 private elementary schools, high schools and colleges in the cities of Marikina, Mandaluyong, Pasig and the town of San Juan.

Police presence

Policemen would also be deployed in areas around schools as well as in terminals and malls in anticipation of mall goers rushing to buy school supplies in the next few days.

"Our Special Weapons and Tactics team is always ready to respond. We also have our District Mobile Force to conduct patrols," Alejandrino added.

Couple dead in QC fire

By DJ Yap

A GARBAGE SCAVENGER AND his wife were killed in a two-hour fire that destroyed their shanty in Quezon City the other night.

The blaze started at around 8:40 p.m. inside the house of Joseph and Teresa Navarra in Sitio Singit, Barangay Bagong Silangan, according to the police, who investigated the case in coordination with fire officials.

Volunteers from the Payatas Fire Brigade were the first to respond to the alarm. But it took them over an hour to put out the flames, said investigator PO3 Diosdado Rocero. The fire was finally put out at 9:45 p.m.

When firefighters went inside the shanty, they discovered the burnt bodies of the Navarra couple, police said.

Neighbors said they had difficulty rousing the Navarras from their sleep to warn them about the fire.

Police said the cause of the fire was still being investigated.

The ordinance, sponsored by Marie Irish Pineda, emphasized two provisions of the law which should be strictly implemented. First, a flexible work schedule must be granted to any single parent employee as long as it does not affect the productivity of the worker and company. Second, any solo parent employee who has rendered at least one year of service must be allowed parental leave of not more than seven days. Violators of the ordinance will be fined P5,000 or face imprisonment of 30 days, or both, depending on the court's discretion.

Leftist murders not easy to solve

THE KILLINGS OF MILITANTS don't have the approval of the government or the military, that's for sure.

Why? Because the government and the military would be the natural suspects in the killings. Who's crazy enough to do something that would be laid at one's doorstep?

More likely, some murders of political activists were committed by military men out to avenge the ambush-killing of their comrades. These military men probably suspected the victims of conniving with the New People's Army (NPA).

But the killings were not sanctioned by the government or the military establishment.

The other killings of militants might have something to do with the continuing purge in the communist ranks. The victims were probably suspected of spying for the government.

Still another reason for the killings did not have to do with politics, but the settling of personal grudges.

Police Deputy Director General Avelino Razon, head of Task Force Usig, formed to investigate the killings, will have a hard time at his new job.

Razon could not even solve the murder of Manila police Supt. Manolo Martinez when he was director of the National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO).

ON TARGET

Ramon Tulfo

Martinez was gunned down while he was about to enter his precinct in Sta. Mesa, Manila.

If Razon could not crack the Martinez murder puzzle, how can he solve the killings of political activists which are much more complicated than the Martinez assassination?

How could the opposition be so stupid as to include the murders of militants in its impeachment complaint that it will soon file before the House of Representatives?

The opposition might as well also include the killings of journalists in the impeachment complaint. After all, doesn't Gloria hate journalists because they have caused all her miseries?

The opposition would be well advised not to waste people's money on trivial things.

A retired Armed Forces general has allegedly built a mansion inside Westgrove, a millionaires' haven, in Sta. Rosa, Laguna.

The house is estimated to have cost the retired general from P30 million to P40 million. That excludes the price of the lot which is valued at P7,000 to P9,000 per square meter.

No wonder this general was scrounging for money when he was about to retire, according to my sources in the AFP.

This is the same guy who, while still in the service, projected an image of being clean and honest by disbanding a corrupt unit that supplied arms to the military in the field.

In fact, he was corrupt to the core. My sources said he didn't spare small projects just so he could earn from them. He even allegedly dipped into the fund for the gasoline allowance of his subordinates.

Here's a hint on his identity: He was the most unpopular and reviled general when he retired.

You'll hear more about this retired general in subsequent columns. As they say in Filipino, abangan.

I'm no longer surprised why this retired general is no longer interested in getting an ambassadorial post.

He's afraid of being grilled on his Westgrove mansion and other properties that he reportedly acquired while he was still in the service.

My sources say he's just waiting to get a civilian sinecure that would not require his designation being approved by the Commission on Appointments.

Bush allows Congress probe of domestic spying

WASHINGTON—THE WHITE House, in an abrupt reversal, has agreed to let the full Senate and House of Representatives intelligence committees review President George W. Bush's domestic spying program, lawmakers said on Tuesday.

The Republican chairmen of the Senate and House panels disclosed the shift two days before a Senate confirmation hearing for Air Force Gen. Michael Hayden as the new CIA director, which is expected to be dominated by concern over the program.

The chairmen said separately that Bush had agreed to full committee oversight of his Terrorist Surveillance Program rather than the more limited briefings allowed up to now.

The White House, under political pressure, did agree to conduct a set of briefings for the two full committees earlier this year, but those sessions did not disclose operational details about the eavesdropping.

Initiated after the Sept. 11 attacks, the program lets the National Security Agency eavesdrop without a court warrant on international phone calls and e-mails made by US citizens if one party is suspected to have links with terrorism.

It has stirred an outcry among rights groups and lawmakers who believe Bush overstepped his constitutional authority.

The White House has sought to avoid full committee oversight by limiting briefings to subcommittees from each panel. Initially, the administration shared program details only with the chairmen and vice chairmen of the committees and party leaders in the House and Senate.

"It became apparent that in order to have a fully informed confirmation hearing, all members of my committee needed to know the full width and breadth of the president's program," Sen. Pat Roberts of Kansas, who heads the 15-member Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, said in a statement.

Democrats, who have long pushed for full hearings, said the change would bring the White House into compliance with the National Security Act of 1947, which requires the executive branch to keep Congress informed on intelligence matters.

"The White House, for the first time, is showing signs that they are serious about oversight," said Democrat Sen. John Rockefeller of West Virginia, the Senate panel's vice chairman.

A full Senate committee briefing was scheduled for Wednesday afternoon. Full oversight was expected to replace subcommittee reviews that have been in place since earlier this year, said committee staff members from both chambers.

Hayden, who was the program's architect as NSA director from 1999 to 2005, was expected to face a blizzard of questions on NSA spying at a Thursday confirmation hearing before Roberts' committee. Republicans and Democrats have said Hayden's confirmation would depend on his answers would be. Reuters

Suicide bomber kills 7 in Russia

MOSCOW—A SUICIDE BOMBER killed seven people including a top Russian policeman on Wednesday when he drove his car into a police convoy in the southern Russian region of Ingushetia.

Among the dead was Dzhabrail Kostoyev, deputy head of the Ingushetia interior ministry, two of his guards, and four civilians, a police spokesperson said.

The news came simultaneously with a report from Interfax news agency that unknown gunmen had killed the governor of a detention center in the region of Karachayev-Cherkessia, further from Chechnya but also increasingly prone to violence.

Rebels have pledged total war against police in the North Caucasus, saying they are collaborating with Russian occupiers.

Islamist websites on Wednesday published comments from a rebel commander in Ingushetia, who pledged such attacks would increase.

"This morning the deputy minister was going to work from the village of Ekazhevo to the town of Nazran. A car containing the suicide bomber drove onto the road from a side-street ... at the moment the convoy was passing," the spokesperson said.

"An investigating group is working at the site to find out the details," he said. Reuters

Sao Paulo police strike back, kill 33 hoods

SAO PAULO, BRAZIL—POLICE killed 33 suspected gang members and searched motorists at roadblocks as officers sought to quell a wave of attacks on police stations, courts and buses that had plunged South America's largest city into fear.

While gang attacks fell off sharply Tuesday, the death toll since the violence began Friday soared to 133 as police struck back at the gangs who had rampaged to protest the prison transfer of their leaders.

Officers "acted within the law, but that doesn't mean we have to let them humiliate us," Marco Antonio Desgualdo, a top Sao Paulo state law enforcement official, told reporters. He did not give specifics about the killings.

Authorities said 33 suspected criminals were killed Tuesday, bringing to 71 the number of suspected gang members killed since Friday night, Sao Paulo's state government said in a statement. The statement said 40 police officers and jail guards and four civilians were also killed.

Nine inmates died in the jails administered by the state government's public security agency, said spokesperson Carolina Farias. And nine prisoners died in prisons overseen by the state government's separate penitentiary division, the agency said in a statement. Neither Farias nor penitentiary spokesperson Marcelo Daniel knew how they died.

With guns drawn Tuesday, plainclothes police in a suburb of South America's largest city stopped and frisked motorists in a hunt for more gang members.

The crime spree showed the strength of organized crime in the financial and industrial heart of Brazil, and it sent fear rippling through the metropolis of 18 million. AP

Overweight elephant won't try treadmill

By Mary Pemberton

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA—SO FAR, it's only the trainers at the Alaska Zoo who seem to be breaking into a sweat.

"They've so far made little progress trying to coax Maggie, a somewhat cantankerous African elephant, onto the world's first treadmill for a pachyderm."

For two months, Maggie's trainers have used her favorite treats—watermelon, apples, carrots, peanuts in the shell, banana slices and sweet potatoes—to entice the 8,000-pound (3,600 kilogram) elephant into exercising on the $100,000 (euro78,000) piece of equipment.

"She has two feet on the treadmill and has touched a third one on it," zoo director Pat Lampi said Tuesday. "Every six inches forward is a new goal. There are a lot of steps to go."

Maggie's trainers and zoo staff aren't discouraged.

"It is just a matter of getting that fourth foot up off the concrete floor," said elephant trainer Rob Smith.

Maggie arrived at the zoo in 1983 as a calf when her herd in Kruger National Park in South Africa was culled. She has been alone since Dec. 14, 1997, when the zoo's other elephant died at age 33 of a foot infection.

The treadmill is part of a $1 million (about euro800,000) program the zoo launched two years ago to improve Maggie's life after deciding to keep Alaska's only elephant instead of placing her at another facility, perhaps in a warmer climate, with more elephants.

The zoo's program for Maggie included doubling the size of the elephant house and installing new heating, light and ventilation systems, including upgraded radiant heat in the concrete floor. Her outdoor paddock was doubled in size.

Feeding stations were placed high so that she now stretches for her food. Treats are hidden around her enclosure to help keep her busy. She's provided birch logs to strip the bark off.

The extra activity and a diet have helped Maggie shed about 1,000 pounds (500 kilograms). "We think she's at a good weight now. It is just a matter of maintaining that," Lampi said.

The Alaska Zoo is letting Maggie call the shots. Trainers can tell just by looking at her that some days she wants to train. Other days not.

"They learn every day of their lives. They're like people," Smith said. "Just like in school, there were days you didn't want to be in the lecture hall." AP

Discovery could help fight 'superbugs'

NEW YORK—RESEARCHERS have found a potentially valuable new antibiotic in a scoop of soil from South Africa.

Using a novel screening technique, scientists from Merck & Co. have found a chemical compound that is effective against germs that have developed resistance to existing antibiotics. The discovery could provide a vital weapon in the ongoing battle against infectious bacteria, which are constantly evolving defenses to the drugs used against them.

"We need to continuously find antibiotics," said Sheo Singh, Merck's director of natural products chemistry.

With the recent emergence of "superbugs" that are resistant to even the most potent antibiotics, there is a very real possibility that in the near future some infections will simply be incurable.

Part of the problem is that most antibiotics are just modifications of drugs that have been around for half a century. Another part of the problem is that despite all the recent advances in genetics and molecular biology, the hunt for new antibiotics is still conducted by trial and error.

The Merck researchers addressed both problems with a clever genetic trick that made an existing drug-hunting process more effective and also targeted novel types of antibiotics.

Their innovation was to test extracts of fungi, plants and other natural substances against bacteria with a genetically engineered Achilles' heel. Because the bacteria were weakened, any compound that harmed them would have a more dramatic effect and thus be easier to identify.

The Merck scientists also chose the genetic handicap carefully, placing it in a metabolic pathway that is not attacked by any major existing antibiotics. That increased the likelihood that any promising compound they discovered would be something for which the bacteria had not yet developed a resistance. AP

Peru woman of 450 A.D.: Warrior-princess or ruler?

A MUMMY OF MYSTERY HAS come to light in Peru.

She was a woman who died some 1,600 years ago in the heyday of the Moche culture, well before the rise of the Incas. Her imposing tomb suggests someone of high status. Her desiccated remains are covered with red pigment and bear tattoos.

But the most striking aspect of the discovery, archaeologists said Tuesday, is not the offerings of gold and semiprecious stones, or the elaborate wrapping of her body in fine textiles, but the other grave goods.

She was surrounded by weaving materials and needles, befitting a woman, and 2 ceremonial war clubs and 28 spear throwers—sticks that propel spears with far greater force—items never found before in the burial of a woman of the Moche (pronounced MOH-chay).

Was she a warrior princess, or perhaps a ruler?

"She is elite, but somewhat of an enigma," said Dr. John Verano, a physical anthropologist at Tulane University, who worked with the Peruvian archaeologists who made the discovery last year.

Dr. Christopher B. Donnan of the University of California, Los Angeles, was not a member of the research team but inspected the mummy and the tomb soon after the find. "It's among the richest female Moche burials ever found," said Donnan, an archaeologist of Peruvian culture. "The tomb combines things usually found either exclusively in male or female burials—a real mystery."

The National Geographic Society announced the discovery and is publishing details in its magazine's June issue. The excavations, more than 400 miles northwest of Lima, were supported by the Augusto N. Wiese Foundation of Peru.

The Moche culture flourished in the coastal valleys of northern Peru in the first 700 years A.D. The woman's tomb was near the summit of a pyramid called Huaca Cao Viejo, a cathedral of the Moche religion.

Verano's X-ray examination revealed that the mummy was a young adult. Lying near her was the skeleton of another young woman who was apparently sacrificed by strangulation with a hemp rope, which was still around her neck. Such sacrifices were common in Andean cultures. Radiocarbon analysis of the rope indicated that the burial occurred around A.D. 450. NYT

Iran: No to 'chocolates for gold' offer

Ahmadinejad rejects European incentives, including light-water reactor

TEHRAN—IRAN'S PRESIDENT MAHMOUD AHMADINEJAD on Wednesday rejected a European plan to offer his country incentives, including a light-water nuclear reactor, in return for giving up uranium enrichment.

"Do you think you are dealing with a 4-year-old child to whom you can give some walnuts and chocolates and get gold from him?" Ahmadinejad told thousands of people in central Iran. European nations have weighed adding a light-water reactor to a package of incentives meant to persuade Tehran to permanently give up uranium enrichment—or face the threat of UN Security Council sanctions. The United States, Israel and the European Union believe that Iran is using its civilian nuclear program as a cover to produce nuclear weapons.

The United States, Britain and France support taking strong measures against Tehran for violating a UN Security Council demand that Iran halt all enrichment-related activities. Russia and China, the other two veto-wielding powers on the council, oppose sanctions.

Uranium enriched to low levels is used to fuel electricity-generating nuclear power plants. Enriched to more than 90 percent, it becomes suitable for use in weapons.

Senior diplomats and EU government officials said Tuesday that the tentative plans were being discussed among France, Britain and Germany as part of a possible package to be presented to senior representatives of the five permanent UN Security Council members at a meeting in London. All spoke on condition of anonymity because of the confidential nature of the information.

"The Iranian nation won't accept any suspension or end" to its uranium enrichment activities, Ahmadinejad said in a speech broadcast live on state television.

He said Iran trusted the European Union in 2003 and suspended its nuclear activities as a gesture to boost negotiations over its nuclear program, only to have the Europeans eventually demand Iran permanently halt its uranium enrichment program.

The 2003 deal called for guarantees that Iran's nuclear program wouldn't diverge from civilian ends toward producing weapons. Iran agreed to the request, but negotiations collapsed in August 2005 when the Europeans said the best guarantee for Iran to permanently give up its uranium enrichment program.

Iran responded by resuming uranium reprocessing activities at its uranium conversion facility in Isfahan, central Iran.

It resumed research and uranium enrichment earlier this year after the International Atomic Energy Agency, the UN nuclear watchdog, referred Tehran to the UN Security Council. AP

US releases film of 9/11 attack on Pentagon

WASHINGTON—THE US GOVERNMENT Tuesday released video clips for the first time showing how a hijacked airliner struck the Pentagon and exploded into a ball of fire on Sept. 11, 2001.

Two security cameras at a Pentagon parking lot caught the moment that American Airlines Flight 77 slammed into the south west side of the military headquarters.

Although the two video clips last about two minutes, the nose of the jet is seen for only a fraction of a second in one film before the explosion.

A huge ball of flame rises from the building and black smoke starts gushing out.

The attack, which came shortly after al-Qaida hijackers flew two airliners into the World Trade Center in New York, killed 189 people on the jet and inside the defense department headquarters in the Washington suburbs.

The Pentagon handed the videos over to Judicial Watch, a watchdog group that sued for its release.

The lack of film evidence of the attack had fueled conspiracy theories suggesting that it had been faked or engineered by the Pentagon against itself.

French writer Thierry Meyssan advanced the theory that the attack was a hoax in a 2002 book called "L'Effroyable Imposture," or "9/11: The Big Lie." The Pentagon vehemently denounced the book as an "appalling" myth concocted at the expense of the victims' families.

Other conspiracy theories presented as mini-documentaries have circulated since then on the Internet. The justice department had previously blocked demands for the release of the videos on grounds that it was evidence in the prosecution of al-Qaida plotter Zacarias Moussaoui.

During the Moussaoui trial, prosecutors showed pictures of burning bodies and human remains as well as images of the explosion triggered by the Pentagon crash.

But with Moussaoui convicted and sentenced to life in prison earlier this month for his role in the Sept. 11 conspiracy, the justice department agreed to the videos' release, officials said. AFP

Beslan suspect guilty of terrorism

VLADIKAVKAZ, RUSSIA—NURPASHI KULAYEV, the lone surviving hostage-taker in the 2004 Beslan school massacre, is guilty of committing acts of terrorism and murder, a Russian judge said Tuesday as he began reading the verdict in a landmark trial.

"The court has established that Kulayev took part in an armed attack and a hostage-taking ..., that he committed murder against defenseless people," said Tamerlan Aguzarov, chief justice of the high court in the southern Russian province of North Ossetia.

"He committed an act of terrorism with the aim of influencing the decisions of the authorities," the judge told the court, reading from a text of the verdict.

Under the Russian legal system, the court's assertion that Kulayev, a Chechen man in his mid-20s, had committed the crimes he was charged with was not the same as a formal announcement of conviction of those crimes. But legal experts said it left no doubt that conviction lay ahead.

"He cannot be acquitted," said Taimuraz Chedzhemov, a lawyer representing the families of the victims, who said the formulation of the verdict read by the judge made it clear that the court had no doubt about Kulayev's guilt. Court officials said the reading of the entire verdict in the trial would take several days.

The state prosecutor in the trial voiced satisfaction at Tuesday's verdict reading.

"The judge confirmed Kulayev's guilt under all eight articles of the indictment," Deputy Prosecutor General Nikolai Shepel was quoted as saying by ITAR-TASS news agency.

The Beslan hostage-takers had demanded the withdrawal of Russian troops from Chechnya, where they have been fighting against separatist rebel forces for most of the past 12 years.

Chechen rebel warlord Shamil Basayev claimed responsibility for the Beslan attack. AFP

North, South Koreans in Japan reconcile after decades of hostility

TOKYO—KOREANS IN JAPAN loyal to the communist North or the capitalist South announced Wednesday they would work to reconcile after half a century of hostility, mirroring reunification efforts on the Korean peninsula.

Leaders of the rival associations of Korean residents held their first meeting since they were forced to take sides after World War II.

Analysts said the thaw was bowing to reality, as the approximately 700,000 Koreans in Japan integrate and lose their affiliations with their ancestral countries.

Japanese Koreans, the country's largest minority, are mostly descendants of people who immigrated or were enslaved during Tokyo's 1910-1945 occupation of the Korean peninsula.

"Welcome," leaders of the North Korean association Chongryon said as they received the pro-Seoul Mindan group at their headquarters, which serves as Pyongyang's de facto embassy in Tokyo in the absence of diplomatic ties.

After signing a joint statement, Mindan President Ha Byeong-ok and Chongryon chair So Man-sul shook each other's hands twice and then hugged each other.

The two groups said they would start reconciliation efforts with symbolic events, such as jointly celebrating the independence of Koreans from Japanese colonial rule on Aug. 15.

"We confirmed with each other that we will firmly convert our longstanding antagonism and confrontation into reconciliation and harmonization," a joint statement said.

Chongryon and Mindan "hereby declare our will to contribute to our homeland's integration and prosperity in the 21st century," it said.

The two Koreans are moving closer together under the "sunshine policy" launched by former South Korean president and Nobel laureate Kim Dae-jung, who travelled to Pyongyang in 2000 for a historic summit.

But the reconciliation in Japan also reflects declining support for the two groups. Around 10,000 Koreans take Japanese nationality each year, usually through marriage.

However, some 60 Japanese nationalists picketed the Chongryon building, which is closely monitored by Japanese intelligence. They held a banner calling the North a "terrorist state" as the pro-Seoul delegates arrived.

Mindan says it has 500,000 members. Chongryon does not give an official number of its membership, which is believed to have fallen sharply since 2002 when North Korea admitted kidnapping Japanese citizens during the Cold War. AFP

Poisoned town wants Saddam's chemical suppliers to pay

HALABJA, IRAQ—AN X-RAY OF Kamil Abdel Qader's lungs show a lower third that is entirely scarred—lasting damage from the poisonous gas that rained down on his Iraqi Kurdish town of Halabja in 1988.

Doctors say he needs to get a fist-size chunk of tissue removed from his damaged lungs if he is going to survive, but he still considers himself the lucky one.

The rest of his family of eight died as they fled the gas, some dropping before his very eyes as they tried to flee into the hills.

Abdel Qader wants payback—for his dead family, his shattered lungs and most of all for battered survivors of an attack that claimed 5,000 lives and destroyed a town.

The Halabja Chemical Victims' Society, Abdel Qader's small non-profit organization, wants the companies and governments which helped Saddam Hussein amass his stockpiles to pay compensation.

The funds would go to the few hundred survivors of the attack that came in the waning days of the Iran-Iraq war that raged between 1980 and 1988.

Though Abdel Qader blames the attack on Saddam and the mastermind of a sweeping anti-Kurd campaign, Ali Hassan al-Majid, dubbed "Chemical Ali" for this attack and others, he said commercial enterprises from around the world shared responsibility for helping arm the regime.

"We are trying to find the companies that helped the Iraqi government get chemical weapons for Saddam. We are trying to tell the world what happened here," said an emaciated Abdel Qader as he sat cross-legged on a carpet in his home.

The names of specific firms which sold Iraq the equipment and expertise needed to assemble its chemical arsenal have never been released.

A UN special disarmament commission UNSCOM set up after the 1991 Gulf War over Kuwait to investigate Saddam's weapons arsenals protected its sources in order to encourage disclosure.

It is believed that just as the US government provided Saddam with intelligence and dual-use technology, such as helicopters, to combat Iran, a long list of Western firms made fortunes exporting chemicals and armaments to Washington's one-time ally.

Abdel Qader has suffered severe health problems for the past 18 years, including chronic bronchitis, severe pulmonary fibrosis and opacity of the left cornea—conditions that doctors said affect a high number of Halabja residents.

Saddam is currently on trial on charges of ordering the killing of 148 Shiite villagers in the mid-1980s, after which he will face charges of genocide for the "Anfal" campaign against the Kurds in which an estimated 100,000 died.

Prosecutors are expected to press charges linked to Halabja in a separate case, but Abdel Qader and other Kurdish activists said the courts should also prosecute those who gave Saddam the tools of his trade.

"Those who are suffering need a lot of money to get treatment in Western hospitals. We want to see those who helped Saddam punished and our rights restored," said Abdel Qader, who needs costly medical treatment abroad. AFP

Santy nears Tour title

By Musong R. Castillo

STA. ROSA, LAGUNA—TIME FOR THE encore.

Except for one fleeting moment, Santy Barnachea made the sixth stage of the Tour Pilipinas Tanduy Padyak Pinoy an uneventful one for his closest pursuer yesterday and set the stage for his date with cycling immortality. Barnachea clung to the overall lead with determination, sticking to Frederick Feliciano like glue after briefly losing him in "Tatlong Eme" to finish in the first wave of riders that Ericson Obosa towed to the wire.

All that stands in the way of Barnachea is a 147.4-kilometer grind from Tagaytay via Talisay, Batangas, and back today before joining the champion's roll that includes some of the greatest, most illustrious names in the sport. And, of course, Feliciano.

But it seems that Santy has got it all figured out. "Patay kung patay na (It's all or nothing)," Barnachea said, moments after keeping the overall jersey of leadership over Feliciano and his overnight 4-minute and 7-second advantage over the vaunted mountain climber intact.

Barnachea now has a total time of 25 hours, 29 minutes and 8 seconds with two laps left.

Cossack Riders keep team lead

STA. ROSA, LAGUNA—COSSACK VODKA inched closer to the team championship of the Tour Pilipinas Tanduy Padyak Pinoy after following a tested game plan to the letter in the sixth lap from Lucena to here.

Rookies Edgardo Ballecer and Michael Reyes finished 3-4 for the day and anchored a strong showing by Cossack, which timed a total of 15 hours, 50 minutes and 44.912 seconds.

Cossack bloated its overall lead to 9 minutes and 31.983 seconds over Team Elixir after Irish Valenzuela, another rookie, brought up the rear of the first group which clocked 3 hours and 57.32 seconds for the 157.20-kilometer stage.

They could have put a fourth rider in the first group had it not been for a mechanical problem that slowed down skipper Renato Sambrano with just over four kilometers left.

Today's seventh lap, a Tagaytay-to-Tagaytay grind spread over 147.4 kilometers, will serve as the final stage of the team event.

Giants nail outright semis slot

By Jasmine W. Payo

THEIR LINEUP DEPLETED, THEIR MORALE at a low, the Purefoods Giants were supposed to be dead meat last night.

Or so everybody thought.

At least, everybody not wearing a Purefoods jersey.

The Giants drew inspiration from an absent teammate, one of many who did not show up due to injuries, and shocked the beefed up Talk 'N Text Phone Pals, 72-69, to claim the second outright semifinal seat in the Gran Matador Brandy-PBA Philippine Cup at the Araneta Coliseum.

"Nobody thought we could win this game but us," said Purefoods coach Ryan Gregorio.

The Giants were playing their first match since the freakish accident that befell scrappy forward Eugene Tejada and they mustered all they could to notch their 11th win in 15 outings.

"We were inspired by one person and that was Eugene," added Gregorio. Purefoods played with the number 33—Tejada's number—stitched to their jerseys.

The Phone Pals fell to 5-9 after skidding to their fifth straight loss, their longest losing streak since 2001. Talk 'N Text also hasn't won since the blockbuster trade that netted them Renren Ritualo and Don Allado.

Tejada is scheduled to go under the knife today to treat a spinal injury after suffering a bad fall Sunday night in what is dubbed as the worst on-court accident ever to hit the league.

The Giants also played minus key players Kerby Raymundo, Noy Castillo and Jun Limpot.

In the first game, the Coca-Cola Tigers held off the Ginebra Kings, 99-88.

Johnny Abarrientos scored six of his 11 points in the final two minutes to help end the Tigers' five-game losing streak.

"I'm just happy that we got our breakthrough win," said Tigers coach Binky Favis. The Tigers improved to 7-7 while the Kings dropped to 6-7.

Iligan hands Bacchus 2nd straight loss

ILIGAN CITY—MAYOR LAWRENCE CRUZ'S Iligan Crusaders dealt Bacchus/Harbour Centre-Manila its second straight loss with a masterful 85-70 victory Tuesday in the 2005 Guerrero Brandy-NBC national basketball championship at the packed MSU-ITT gym here.

Last year's MVP Christian Nicdao played his best game so far to lead the Firefly Lightings-backed Crusaders to their seventh win in 10 games with 25 points on an eye-popping 11-of-13 shooting plus 11 rebounds.

After dealing defending champion Ozamiz Cot-ta its first loss in the southern division, the Manilaños of businessman Mikee Romero and coach Lawrence Chongson sputtered in the fourth quarter and ended their southern swing with their fourth defeat in 10 games.

Nicdao scored 11 of his points in the payoff period, which saw Ozamiz overcome a 59-61 deficit to pull away and remain behind southern division leader Ozamiz.

The scores:
ILIGAN 85—Nicdao 25, Omiping 15, Matias 14, Go 9, Kalaw 9, Ayodille 5, Sagad 4, Hualde 2, Tajonera 2, Gandarosa 0, Taguines 0, Baguio 0.

NBC selections playing abroad

THE NATIONAL BASKETBALL CONFERENCE (NBC) has been invited to play in two international tournaments—one in Taiwan and the other in Thailand.

Hua Lien Probation Association president Lin Yo-Chih invited NBC, through president Nathaniel "Tac" Padilla, to compete in the Hua Lien Probation Basketball Championship on May 25-28 in Hua Lien, Taiwan.

The NBC Selection has also been requested to defend its title in the Crown Prince's Cup tournament on June 26-July 2 in Hatyai, Songkha, Thailand.

"We're honored to be invited to these two international events," said Padilla. "We'll definitely do our best to bring honors to the country."

The NBC board has decided to send a selection of the best players in the northern division to play in Hua Lien. The best cagers in the southern division will carry NBC's colors in Thailand.

"We're looking forward to show our Asian neighbors that we're still a power to reckon with in the region," said NBC executive vice president and Tagaytay City Mayor Bambol Tolentino.

NCAA names Jun B commissioner

INTEGRITY, PROFESSIONALISM AND EXPERIENCE are what Emilio "Jun" Bernardino Jr. will bring as he assumes the position of basketball commissioner of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The former Philippine Basketball Association commissioner was officially named during a joint meeting by the NCAA Policy Board and Management Committee yesterday at the St. Benilde Hotel in Manila.

Bernardino is no doubt the right man for the job as the NCAA celebrates its 82nd season to be hosted by College of St. Benilde with his vast experience and knowledge in basketball, highlighted by his stint in Asia's first play-for-pay loop.

The former University of the Philippines Maroon was named PBA commissioner in 1994. He stepped down after the 2002 season due to a heart ailment.

"It is my pleasure to serve the NCAA for the 82nd season. Considering what basketball has given me, in terms of where I am now, I think it is (but) natural that I give back what I have received throughout the years," said Bernardino.

The NCAA men's basketball tournament starts June 24 at the Araneta Coliseum, with the Letran Knights shooting for back-to-back titles.

After playing for the Maroons, Bernardino joined Teflin in 1979 as an assistant coach to Fely Fajardo for two PBA seasons. When the club disbanded in 1981, he turned to broadcasting.

In July that year, Bernardino joined the league as executive secretary. He went on to become executive director then deputy commissioner and finally, commissioner—the youngest to be appointed at the age of 46.

Spinners try to take heat out of Sparks

By Jasmine W. Payo

IT SEEMED THE MAGNOLIA SPINNERS HAVE TO RELEARN EVERYTHING in the PBL Unity Cup.

Considered a shoo-in in the title series when the tournament started, coach Roy Banal had to challenge the Spinners "to figure out how to win" to stay in the running.

Relief came for Banal when the Spinners scored their first back-to-back victories last week that boosted their campaign for the second twice-to-beat quarterfinal incentive.

But the Spinners must dispose the overachieving Toyota Otis Sparks at 2 p.m. today to sustain their bid.

Already semifinal-bound, Toyota Otis will be playing pressure-free like the Montaña Pawnshop, which will tackle Hapee-PCU in the second game at 4 p.m. at the Olivarez Sports Center in Parañaque.

Granny Goose already claimed the first twice-to-beat edge in the quarterfinals after finishing the elimination round at third place.

Banal said Magnolia, which is contesting the remaining quarterfinal incentive versus Rain or Shine, has to end its inconsistent run.

"That is the hump we have to overcome," said Banal.

Sparks coach Louie Alas, however, feels the Spinners will always be tough to figure out.

Toyota Otis has only beaten Magnolia once in 10 matches since joining the league two years ago.

Meanwhile, the Jewels will be gunning for a sweep over Hapee-PCU after winning their first encounter, 90-81, in overtime.

Ken Bono will be coming off a near-perfect performance—shooting 7-of-8 from the field—to finish with 15 points against Toyota Otis last Saturday.

Hapee-PCU dropped out of the quarterfinal race after absorbing its sixth straight loss versus Magnolia.

Adamson too powerful for UE spikers

GAMES SATURDAY (Blue Eagle Gym)

- 4 p.m.—SSC vs UE
- 6 p.m.—PCU vs Lyceum

By Marc Anthony Reyes

ADAMSON UNLEASHED THE FULL EXTENT OF its volleyball power against hapless University of the East, 25-20, 25-9, 25-19, last night to improve the record it will carry into the next round of the Shakey's V-League at the Blue Eagle Gym.

Already in the semifinals and battling a winless foe, the Lady Falcons refused to hold their punches and pounded the Lady Warriors mercilessly to post their fifth win in six games.

The Lady Warriors, who fell to 0-6, never got going although they were able to pile up points in the latter part of the first and third sets when the Lady Falcons experimented with new combinations.

National team mainstay Cherry Rose Macatangay led Adamson's attack as expected, scoring 14 outright winners to finish with 20 points while Rissa Jane Laguilles added eight kills out of her nine points.

But the Lady Falcons got a big scare when pretty libero Donna Leil Adajar hurt her elbow while diving for a save and colliding with team captain Kristine Ann Dave in the second set. She bruised her right elbow in the process.

Adamson coach Minerva Pante said the injury was "nothing serious" and that the 5-foot defense specialist would be ready to play in the carry-over semis which starts next week.

Rubie de Leon, one of the Adamson guest players, contributed 10 points, including two blocks to assist Macatangay at the net. The 5-foot-11 Macatangay finished with three blocks.

QCHS, St. Joseph bets gain q'finals

QUEZON CITY HIGH SCHOOL RALLIED to beat University of Perpetual Laguna, 7-25, 25-20, 25-21, in the Shakey's Girls Volleyball Invitational League at the Ateneo Blue Eagle Gym.

Fresh from the recent Naga Palarong Pambansa, the trio of Mary Rose Cabanag, Girlie Quemada and Mikaela Morada combined for 16 kills and 6 blocks as against 12 kills and 4 blocks by Jennelyn Belen, Jessica Curato and Sarah Jane Gonzales of UPHL.

With the win, QCHS is now solo leader in Bracket B with a 3-0 slate and is assured of a berth in the quarterfinals.

In other matches, St. Joseph College beat UP Integrated School in straight sets 25-17, 25-9. Diliman Preparatory School dealt Imus Institute its second loss 25-17, 25-15.

University of Perpetual Help Molino defeated Grace Christian School in 25-14, 21-25, 25-17.

In Bracket D, University of the East, the reigning UAAP junior division champion, is likewise assured of a berth with a 4-0 slate having won its match against Mater Ecclesiae 25-13, 25-5.

Hope Christian School hopes to win on Thursday when they play Prenza Nat'l High School to sweep Bracket A unto the quarterfinals.

The Shakey's Girls Volleyball Invitational League is supported by Dunkin Donuts, Toby's Sports, Mikasa, the Official Volleyball, Asics and Air Philippines.

Six matches are scheduled tomorrow at the Ateneo gym.

Parica keeps clean record

FILIPINO VETERAN Jose "Amang" Parica nipped American Mike Davis, 11-10, yesterday to post his third straight win and remain unscathed in the 2006 Enjoypool.com 9-Ball Championship at the Riviera Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, Nevada.

Parica, who led the Filipino billiards invasion in the US in the mid-80s, earlier trounced American Nick Varner, 11-8, and Canadian No.2 Luc Salvas, 11-6.

He will next face former world champion Johnny Archer of the US.

Earlier, Rodolfo "Boy Samson" Luat suffered his first loss at the hands of ex-US Open titlist American Corey Deuel, 11-7, to join fellow Filipino Santos Sambajon in the loser's bracket.

Sambajon beat Joey Korsialk, 11-7, but bowed to Nicolas Guimond, 11-5, in the second round. He will face David Reljik in the loser's side.

Efren "Bata" Reyes and Dennis "Surigao" Orcollo are battling each other in the third round.

Magallanes, Camacho ahead

FAVORITES LED BY REY JOMAR Magallanes of the University of the East posted perfect scores of two points Tuesday along with 25 other seeded players in the 2006 National Juniors elimination being held at St. Francis Square in Mandaluyong City.

Also with two points were Ivan Gil Biag of UP, Froilan Bolico III of FEU, Catrhino Pestaño, Jimsoon Bitoon of Cebu, Anselmo Mercado Jr., Marvin Ting from Negros and

Meanwhile, the elimination for the age-group will be on May 21-25 also at the same venue.

Long shots Yee, Villa gain NTCC semis slots

MATCHES TODAY (8 a.m.)

Ladies' semifinals: Cyna Rodriguez (Riviera) vs Vinice Godio (Sta. Elena/Alabang), Kwon Ye Seul (Eagle Ridge) vs Kathleen Uy (Cebu)

Men's semifinals: Zaldy Villa (Valley) vs. Tootsie de Jesus (Tagaytay Highlands), Edmund Yee (Manila Southwoods) vs Park Jong Soo (Eastridge)

By Jong Arcano

GEN. TRIAS, CAVITE—THEY CRAMMED for practice together at the four Eagle Ridge courses they hardly knew. Aside from their lack of knowledge of the venues, Edmund Yee and Zaldy Villa felt they were too old to have a chance against the young ones in the National Tournament of Club Champions here.

Three days into the tourney presented by Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corp and INQUIRER Golf, most of the top seeds are gone but the two businessmen in their late 40s are still very much alive.

Southwoods bet Yee, owner of a car distribution franchise, and Valley's Villa, who operates a metal fabrication firm, posted 1 up victories against separate rivals yesterday to reach the semifinals at the Eagle Ridge Golf and Country Club.

After ousting young Miko Yee of Riviera in the round of 16, Villa enhanced his giant-killer tag by eliminating top seed Venjo Reyes of Manila Golf while Yee re-asserted his mastery of Indren Naidoo of Alabang in pulsating matches.

In today's Final Four, Yee faces Jong Soo

Park, the man who beat him in a duel for the Eastridge title, and Villa squares off with Tootsie de Jesus of Tagaytay Highlands. Park defeated Jan Coup Tambogon of Eagle Ridge, 2&1, and de Jesus squeaked past Oliver Gan of Tagaytay Midlands, 1 up.

In the ladies division, junior players Cyna Rodriguez of Riviera and Kwon Ye Seul moved closer to an expected showdown for the crown by ripping their opponents.

Rodriguez, 14, clipped Maan Legaspi, 483, to forge a semis duel with Vinice Godio while Kwon, 15, was merciless in a 6&4 stoppage of Beachie Abiera (Southwoods/Tagaytay Midlands).

Godio, who represents Sta. Elena and Alabang, scored a 2&1 decision over Matet Salivio to earn another trip to the semis. Kwon tackles Kathleen Uy, a 5&4 winner over Lyn Mangulabnan.

Sponsors of the NTCC are Sta. Lucia Realty, Callaway as the official apparel, Isuzu the official vehicle, Titleist the official ball, PAL the official carrier, Chivas Regal, The Travel Club and Pacific Air Media. Platonic, the first locally assembled golf cart, is hole-in-one sponsor.

Park, Gabasa lead winners

JONG SOO PARK OF EASTRIDGE DISPLAYED brute strength and 11-year-old Irina Gabasa holed a long 40-foot putt to lead the winners in the Isuzu Skills Challenge of the National Tournament of Club Champions at the Eagle Ridge Golf and Country Club.

The lanky Park, son of a Korean business executive, hit a 319-yard drive to rule the longest drive competition while pint-sized Gabasa, representing Alta Vista, won the putting contest.

Edmund Yee of Manila Southwoods, Rodel Mangulabnan and Tootsie de Jesus took the other awards in the men's division while Vinice Godio, Mater Salivio and Maan Legaspi were the other prize winners in the distaff side.

Yee topped the bunker competition, De Jesus the pitching contest and Mangulabnan the putting event.

Godio was closest to the pin while Legaspi hit the best bunker shot. Winners received P3,000 worth of gift certificates and Isuzu golf items.

Echavez surges to 3-stroke lead

PAUL ECHAVEZ RODE ON A FIERY START TO fire a solid three-under par 69 yesterday and surge ahead by three strokes over Jun Bernis halfway through the Samsung Amateur Golf Tour at the Summit Point and Country Club in Lipa, Batangas, yesterday.

Echavez, one of the recipients of the National Caddies Open program, birdied Nos. 6, 8 and 9 to seize control then held on to his lead with a two-birdie, two-bogey stint at the back for a 33-36 card.

Counting his even par round on the first day, the 17-year-old Echavez from Apo posted a 36-hole total of 141 going into the final two rounds of this event serving as the second leg of a five-stage series backed by Samsung.

Bernis padded his overnight one-shot lead to two with a birdie on No. 2, but the Canlubang bet couldn't match Echavez's run.

Gary Sales moved one rung up to No. 3 with a 74 but fell behind by seven with a 148 while former champion Kim Chang Hoi carded a 73 to tie Ronnie Torrecampo, who fired a one-under par 71, at 149.

Live, and in color, the horror that was Tejada

IN HIS FOURTH SEASON IN THE PBA, Eugene Tejada suffers the horror of a fall that injures his neck and cervical/spinal cord. Live, and in color.

At Makati Med where Tejada is confined, doctors say Tejada might need a surgery, if not surgeries, to hopefully return him to his original, healthy self.

What happened to both Superman and EZ Zobel, wheelchair-bound for years before they died due to spinal injuries after falling off horses, assaults the mind.

Please say a prayer for the Fil-Am, whose basketball career—should medical masters mercifully fail—is in danger of having an abrupt end.

Far from turning 30, Tejada's too young to lose a profession.

One "Our Father" for Tejada, please?

I recently suffered a similar fate medically termed "cervical disc injury." Not from basketball, though, but from writing too much.

Who said writing isn't hazardous to one's health?

In my case, X-rays and MRIs showed my C 3-4-5 misaligned, the result of too much sitting while writing. Asian Hospital's Dr. Antonio Ma. G. Calanoc and Capitol's Dr. Editha A. Tuason have agreed on putting me to a multiple-session, four-week therapy/rehab at Capitol under expert PTs Bjorn Berber and Jade Francisco.

Thank God, two more rehabs and I'm done.

Golf, here I come.

Tejada was playing his 70th PBA game when he lost his rebound balance and fell buttocks first.

That was last Sunday, May 14, when Purefoods, Tejada's third PBA team in three years after Alaska 2003-2004 and San Miguel Beer 2005, was playing Red Bull.

Sunday's game made him accumulate a total of 595 minutes, the last 9 of which saw him score 2 points on 1-of-

SPECTATOR

Al S. Mendoza

2 shooting, snare 2 rebounds and block one shot.

This particular Sunday, he played 3 minutes in the first quarter and was 0-for-1 from the field, 2 minutes each in the second and third. In the third, he was 1-of-1—his basket making it 37-57, Purefoods behind, with 4:20 gone in the period.

Barely two minutes after coach Ryan Gregorio fielded Tejada in the fourth, Tejada would suffer the tragedy that threw the league in panic as it absorbed its most serious accident since the PBA's birth in 1975.

Playing in his 12th game in the 14th match for Purefoods in the conference, Tejada would soon rank it as the game he hoped he'd never played in.

It happened with the score pegged at 73-54, Red Bull up, 5:43 left in the game.

You are down by 19 points with under 6 minutes left, who would die playing for a win?

Tejada, it'd be.

Giants' Roger Yap had missed on a lay-up. Tejada went for the rebound, caught some skin of Yap and both fell.

In a split second, the lumbering Mick Pennisi of Red Bull, all of 6-foot-10, fell on Tejada, 6-foot-5-1/2, as Yap was picking himself safely up.

When he hit wood, Tejada said he heard —felt?—a crack in his body. Soon, he'd be writhing in pain.

Soon, he'd be in tears.

Soon, he'd find his girl friend, the actress Jenny Fernandez, consoling him no end—with ABC-5's Pat Bermudez Hizon close by.

As he lay there numb from waist down, a teammate, Kerby Raymundo, held his hand.

Other teammates, team officials and doctors from both friend and enemy camps hovered around him.

Nobody would touch him as though he had the bubonic plague.

Because Lifeline Arrows wasn't around, had no standby ambulance in stark violation of league contracts, Tejada lay on the floor for nearly 40 minutes—helpless as a cat hit by a hit-and-run maniac.

If a fan gone berserk had shot Tejada in the leg instead of Tejada suffering the fall, the poor kid would have died from loss of blood.

Gosh, Antipolo's Ynares Center, scene of the accident, was almost an hour away from Makati Med!

Stretcher and ambulance, where were they for Chrissakes?

"Caloy" had swept them off to the South China Sea?

Rene Pardo would have been justified tearing the Lifeline Arrows logo instead of kicking the dilapidated mattress being offered to load Tejada en route to the invisible ambulance.

If Commissioner Eala is still sharpening his arrows right now to shoot down Lifeline, I recommend instead an AK-47. Quicker. Deadlier.

What will happen now to Tejada, born in Daly City and who turns 26 on Sept. 24, not even his father, Danilo, a former basketball player himself from Rosario, Batangas, would know. Nor his mother, Angeles, a nurse from Balayan, Batangas.

Tejada's Dad and Mom have arrived from the United States where they've been living for decades—the last four years far from their son.

In times like this, please light a candle for the art of coping with tragedy—if ever there is one.

Wade steal seals Heat victory

Miami shows New Jersey the door, advances to East finals

MIAMI—DWYANE WADE intercepted a pass for Vince Carter as time expired, and Miami held on for a 106-105 win over New Jersey and reached the National Basketball Association semifinals for the second straight year.

Antoine Walker scored 23 points and Wade overcame a slow start to add 21 for the second-seeded Heat on Tuesday, who eliminated the third-seeded Nets in five games and await the winner of the Detroit-Cleveland series.

Walker and backup center Alonzo Mourning picked up the slack for Wade and Shaquille O'Neal, who again was limited by foul trouble and scored 17 points.

"We are back and playing at a high level," O'Neal said. "Our X men are playing well. In the next round we just want to play whoever is the best team."

A year ago, Miami lost in seven games to Detroit as Wade tried to play through a painful rib injury.

Wade has taken some terrific tumbles in this year's playoffs but the superstar guard is relatively healthy and will have at least a week off before the next series.

"We get to rest a little but then bring it on," Wade said. "It's a nice feeling knowing you're the first team (in the semis) and can watch everyone else try to get in."

After erasing a double-digit first-half deficit, the Heat never trailed in the fourth quarter, taking the lead for good at 98-96 on a breakaway dunk by Wade with 4:37 to play.

He made six-of-10 shots in the second half after a one-of-nine start.

Jason Williams scored 12 points, Mourning added 11 and Gary Payton 10 for the Heat, who shot 56 percent (42-of-75) to overcome 15-of-29 foul shooting.

Jefferson also scored 33 points, Jason Kidd added 20 and Lamond Murray 14 for the Nets, who shot 54 percent (40-of-74).

New Jersey lost the last four games after winning game one in Miami.

Behind Carter, the Nets jumped to a 33-24 lead and to 38-27 on a jumper by Kidd with 10:15 left in the second.

"We attacked the basket and were aggressive, but a loss is a loss. We're going home," Carter said. AFP

Suns outlast Clippers in 2 OT, take 3-2 lead

PHOENIX, ARIZONA—SHAWN MARION scored six of his 36 points in the second overtime as Phoenix outlasted the Los Angeles Clippers, 125-118, on Tuesday to take a 3-2 lead in their quarterfinal series.

"We came out, battled and hung in there pulled it out man," Marion said. "It is all about pain."

In yet another thrilling overtime postseason game, the second-seeded Suns moved within one win of a return trip to the National Basketball Association's penultimate round.

They blew a 19-point second-half lead and were rescued by Raja Bell, who drained a tying three-pointer with 1.1 seconds to play in the first overtime.

"It was good play call," Bell said. "I thought if I got open I was going to make it. I wasn't ready to go home yet."

"This has been our character all year. If someone makes a mistake we don't point fingers."

Matched up against the bigger Elton Brand for most of the game, Marion did most of the work inside for the Suns.

He made 16-of-33 shots and helped Phoenix fight on the backboards. And with most players nearing exhaustion in the second overtime, Marion still had a reserve of energy.

He opened the period with two free throws—Phoenix's first made foul shots since the second quarter—and added a flying follow dunk to give the Suns the lead for good at 115-113 with 3:20 remaining.

Marion appeared to hurt his ankle on the play but returned shortly thereafter. After a three-point play by Brand pulled the Clippers within 119-118 with 1:22 to go, Marion took a nifty pass from Canada's Steve Nash and made a running bank shot at the 1:05 mark.

The sixth-seeded Clippers never scored again as Leandro Barbosa and Nash each sank two foul shots to seal it.

With game six in Los Angeles on Thursday, Los Angeles was one stop from going home with a 3-2 lead after a turnover by Nash led to two free throws by Sam Cassell that opened a 111-108 lead with 3.6 seconds left in OT.

Tim Thomas scored 25 points, Bell added 22 and Nash 17 and 13 assists for the Suns, who shot 46 percent (49-of-107), including 11-of-29 from the arc.

Brand had 33 points, 15 rebounds and five blocks and Cassell scored 32 points for the Clippers, who shot 41 percent (42-of-103). AFP

KARATE OPEN

National team standouts shine

Chu, of YDKA-Cagayan de Oro, bagged the gold in the -65 kg. men's kumite category by beating Rolando Lagman of SKI-NCR in the final round.

Eso of SKI-Manila dominated the -53 kg. women's kumite event against Angelica Saligan in the finals while Philippine Army standout Toribio topped the -60 kg. men's kumite class after beating Cebuano karateka Jim Paredes.

Other winners in the tournament organized by Philippine Karate Federation (PKF) Region XI director Ernesto Tacay were Niño Franco (-55 kg. men's kumite), Adorra Aquino (-48 kg. women's kumite), Salman Saad (men's open weight kumite) and May Libao (women's open weight kumite).

Southeast Asian Games bronze medalist Cherli Tugday was the most decorated karateka in the two-day meet with 1 gold, 1 silver and 1 bronze.

The 26-year-old Tugday, who won a bronze alongside Gretchen Malalad in the 2002 Busan Asian Games, placed third behind Libao and Anisa Pangcoga in the women's open weight event. She also emerged as the champion in the -60 kg. kumite event while placing second in the individual kata event.

"I'm happy about the results we got because all members of the team qualified again, thanks to the training of our coach, David Lay," said Malalad, who is already seeded to the national team, along with fellow SEAG gold medalists Marna Pabillore and Nelson Pacalso.

"We also found new potentials who could further strengthen the national karate team and we will prepare very hard for the world karate federation championships and the Asian Games," added Malalad.

Teener Uy produces perfection

JAMES MARTIN UY, 15, SCORED A PERFECT game recently at the monthly Ruler of the Lanes tournament of the Sta. Lucia East Tenpin Bowling Association (Sletba) at the Sta. Lucia East Bowling Center in Cainta, Rizal.

This was Uy's first perfect game since he took up bowling two and a half years ago. A right hander, Uy used a 15-pound Fear Factor. "I was so nervous when 'stop bowling' was announced," Uy said. "I felt my hands trembling and cold because all eyes were on me. I turned to my coach and mentor, Mr. Mer Tan, who told me: 'Huwag mo nang pakawalan yan (Don't let it go).'"

He took his position and calmly released the ball which rolled right into the pocket for the 300 score.

Uy, an incoming junior at the Lourdes School of Mandaluyong, is a member of the Sletba "Batang X-tra," a group of young bowlers being trained by Tan and Boy Florencio. Batang X-tra has slated a bowling fellowship on June 12 at the Sta. Lucia Bowling Center, with cash prizes at stake.

The 6-foot-3 James also plays basketball when not bowling. He said he bowls only once a week when there's classes, and practices four times a week during the summer break.

James expressed his gratitude to his father, Jimmy Uy, a businessman and himself a good bowler, mom Marilou, coach Tan and Boy Florencio, his "classmates" and friends at Batang X-tra and Sletba for their support.

Wrong way to 'discover' new child star

EVERY YEAR, OUR TV CHANNELS hold competitions for child performers—singers, actors, dancers, hosts, models, or all of the above. That's all to the good, because local show business needs new infusions of young talents to help keep our shows fresh and vital.

In many instances, however, TV tilts for child talents are characterized by a wrong-headed approach to "discovering" the juvenile stars of tomorrow.

Instead of focusing on real talent and stellar charisma, they stress porma, gaya-gaya, iyak-tawa, and making kids look and perform like little adults.

This is terribly wrong. Even if a child is genuinely talented, by the time he or she emerges from this injudicious process, he or she has become shallow, pa-cute, self-conscious, artificial and cloying.

This is a great pity, because Filipino children are exceptionally natural and gifted talents—before their stage parents and the TV channels wreak their worst on them.

Why do they do this? Because they believe that local viewers think kids who act like little adults are cute and smart. And because TV people go for program elements that can be depended on to instantly gratify the audience, and "cute" kids, no matter how artificial, are thought to be a quick way to do this.

It's understandable, but it's a poor use of our young resources. It also makes for dismayingly brief careers, for the most part: After a year or so, the cute kid of the moment has become so predictable that he's quickly replaced with another juvenile "talent," ad nauseam.

The approach is truly wrong-headed, because local show biz history completely refutes and debunks it.

Think of the best child stars in past decades, like Nino Muhlach and Aiza Seguerra, and you will realize that they became young superstars precisely because they weren't porma, didn't resort to gaya-gaya and iyak-tawa, but were in fact original talents who were true to themselves and refused to do what everybody else was doing.

As a result, they stood out, and millions of viewers doted on them, because they were genuinely smart and idiosyncratic, and loved to talk a blue streak.

If this is the top standard, shouldn't other child talents also aspire to reach that level? But no, their unenlightened stage parents and knee-jerk TV people don't have the imagination, creativity and determination for it. So, most young tal-

Is it any wonder, therefore, that, even after so many kiddie talent tilts, we don't have a major child star today?

The fault, dear readers, isn't in our child talents, but in the brutes who mishandle them, and thus pre-

From Hector Garcia (hfg@rocketmail.com), 114 Gloria IV Subd., Tandang Sora, QC:
To those who want "The Da Vinci Code" banned in the Philippines: Get a life! You should've asked for the book to be banned in the first place! What? You thought the book wasn't worth banning because people don't read? They just watch movies and TV? Find something better and more meaningful to do! The movie is based on the book, and the book is FICTION! FICTION! FICTION! Nothing in the book or movie will change my faith! After I read and watch, it's over! It's entertainment, don't you get it?!

Gov't orders audit of tax credit certificates

Demand for motorcycles grows *
(2001-2005)

For the last five years the sales of motorcycles in the country have been going up. The biggest increase was in 2004 of about 44 percent - 495,400 units were sold compared to 343,036 units in the previous year. The local industry forecasts that the demand for motorcycles in the coming years would reach at least one million units per year.

BIR blames increased use of TCCs for shortfall

By Michelle V. Remo

THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE HAS ORDERED AN AUDIT OF the volume of tax credit certificates (TCCs) issued by the government and the validity of credits claimed by businesses.

The move was prompted by reports that the Bureau of Internal Revenue's huge tax-collection shortfall in April was partly due to the substantial increase in the use of TCCs by corporate taxpayers.

"We need to know the stock of certificates floating and how this is allocated among taxpayers. We have to improve our database and monitoring system," Finance Secretary Margarito Teves said in a briefing yesterday.

The BIR earlier reported that it collected only P71.3 billion in taxes in April, thus falling short of its P78.6-billion target for the month. The revenue agency said its collection efforts were dampened by the decline in cash remittance of income taxes as many companies used TCCs to settle part of their obligations.

Income tax collection by the BIR stood at only P48.5 billion, or 15-percent short of the P57.3-billion target.

Teves said he has directed concerned agencies like the BIR to make an inventory of all TCCs issued in the past to substantiate claims of an increase in tax-credit claims. He added that an inventory would give authorities a full grasp of how much tax credits should really be recognized by the government.

The BIR has also suggested putting a cap on Market reaction, however, was relatively muted because investors have already factored in the positive data and remained wary after recent heavy losses in the region, they said.

Microsoft bullish Gov't privatization chief quits on RP, to open Cebu office

By Abigail L. Ho

CONTINUING TO POST STRONG GROWTH in the Philippine market, software giant Microsoft Corp. will be opening a Cebu office in June, its first outside Metro Manila.

The firm's Cebu office would initially have 10-12 employees, Microsoft Philippines managing director Antonio Javier said.

It would be headed by Magtanggol Bawal, previously Microsoft Philippines chief financial officer.

THE KEY PERSON OVERSEEING THE sale of state-owned assets yesterday tendered his irrevocable and immediate resignation.

Jose A.R. Bengzon III, the government's chief privatization officer, yesterday said he resigned with the intention of going back to the private sector and with the belief that he had already served his purpose in the Privatization Management Office (PMO).

Bengzon, who worked in the banking industry for 25 years, said he wanted to work as a mutual fund or securities fund manager, believed to be a much lucrative job than his previous stint in the PMO.

He worked for the trust and securities sales department of Bank of the Philippine Islands (BPI) for nine years until 2004.

Bengzon said he believed he already helped institute the needed reforms in the PMO and that the government agency could make substantial progress in the privatization program with the reforms in place.

"An important legacy I left behind was the creation of a master list of all the assets," he told the INQUIRER in an interview. He said the PMO has gotten an audit report and inventory of all state-owned assets that the PMO could privatize, including their market value, thus making it easier for the government to go on with its privatization program.

He said he also instituted the creation of committees for various major state assets being privatized to further boost their chances of being sold.

Under his tenure, the biggest government asset sold was the shares in Philippine National Bank, which were sold to the Lucio Tan group for more than P8 billion. Of the amount, P2 billion went to the national government's

Meralco gets CPCNs for 11 Metro cities, municipalities

By Abigail L. Ho

THE ENERGY REGULATORY Commission has made permanent the Manila Electric Co.'s 25-year provisional authority to provide electricity services in 11 cities and municipalities within its franchise area.

In an order dated March 23, the regulatory body gave Meralco certificates of public convenience and necessity (CPCNs) to provide services in Malabon, Manila, Pasay, Mandaluyong, Quezon City, Caloocan, Makati, Parañaque, Las Piñas, Navotas and San Juan.

The CPCNs are valid for 25

These allow Meralco to construct, install, operate and maintain electric services in the 11 Metro Manila cities and municipalities.

In handing down the CPCNs, the ERC considered certain indicators from 2002, including the number of power interruptions in the Meralco franchise area, the duration of these interruptions, as well as the distribution utility's investment commitments to improve its service.

According to Meralco documents, which it submitted to the ERC in its application for CPCNs, customers in its franchise area suffered an average of nine interruptions in 2002, with an average duration of 13 hours throughout the year.

Interruptions lasting less than five minutes occurred 21 times that year.

To improve the reliability and quality of its service, Meralco committed P992 million in investments for its Pasay sector for eight years starting 2003. This amount bankrolled the development and expansion of substations in that area.

It also invested or committed to invest P992 million in Pasay, P107.7 million in Mandaluyong, P15.4 million in Malabon, P461.5 million in Manila, P111.9 million in Caloocan, P13.6 million in Navotas, P318.6 million in Parañaque, P386.6 million in Quezon City, P160.4 million in Las Piñas, P692.3 million in Makati, and P7.5 million in San Juan.

These investments are all earmarked for the upgrade and expansion of substations in those areas. Some have already been disbursed, while others are still in the pipeline.

7-11 operator trims losses to P18.6M

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

PHILIPPINE SEVEN CORP., operator of the biggest convenience store network in the country, trimmed its net losses to P18.6 million in the January-to-March period due to improved revenues from marketing, franchising and interest on investments.

PSC operates the chain of 7-11 stores in the country.

In a financial report with the Philippine Stock Exchange, PSC said other income—driven largely by franchise revenues—grew 138 percent to P43.3 million in the first quarter.

Total revenues from merchandise sold in the first quarter was slightly higher at P1.09 billion from P1.08 billion in the same period last year.

The growth in revenues in the first quarter pales compared with last year's first-quarter growth of 31 percent. The decline was due to the lower growth in the number of operating stores in the first quarter.

Same-store monthly sales also fell 0.6 percent in the first quarter due to the implementation of the expanded value-added tax, which had affected customers' buying power.

Commission income amounted to P8 million, 21.3 percent lower compared to same period last year. The decline in commissions was due to the proliferation of retailers offering similar products.

Operating expenses in the first quarter reached P395 million, 6.7 percent higher than the P370 million in the same period last year.

Personnel costs, utilities and rentals were still the major expenses of the company.

In the first quarter, PSC ended with 270 stores, a 7-percent increase from last year's 253 stores. During the quarter, 16 stores were renovated.

PSC will open 34 stores in the next few months to complete its target of 50 additional stores this year.

Merlinda Ordoyo, head of the BIR's Large Taxpayers Service, said the cap could be set at 25 percent of a firm's total tax credits. This means that for any given tax period, a corporate entity can only use 25 percent of its total tax credits as payment for its obligations.

But she said the proposed capping of the use of TCCs still needed approval by the DOE, the BIR's head agency, and the Board of Investments (BOI).

TCCs, which can be used to pay taxes, are instruments issued to companies belonging to industries considered priority by the government, such as the export sector, as a fiscal incentive. These are also issued to firms that have tax refund claims.

Noticing an increase in tax credit claims, Ordoyo said, the BIR was in fact asking some large taxpayers to defer the use of their TCCs because of its adverse impact on tax collection.

She said TCCs could be used within five years upon the date of issue, and could be revaluated for another five years upon request.

"We were personally asking taxpayers to delay the use of TCCs, but of course we did not have any legal backup to force them to do so because claiming tax credits is a right of taxpayers," she said.

cial officer and finance manager for the Asia-Pacific region, he said.

He said the decision to open a Cebu office followed the country's consistently good performance compared with other Microsoft units in the region.

For the company's fiscal 2006, which started July 1, 2005, he noted that the Philippine unit posted an "exceptional" performance, with its Windows business growing more than 10 times faster than the personal computer (PC) shipment rate.

Javier said the Philippine arm had become the biggest Microsoft subsidiary in Southeast Asia in terms of revenue, but he declined to give details.

In terms of head count, the local office also grew 80 percent this fiscal year, with Microsoft employees now totaling about 100, he said.

Apart from wanting to support its consistent growth in the Philippines, he said the Microsoft Cebu office would be established to further strengthen the software giant's foothold in the Visayas and Mindanao markets.

"The Visayas and Mindanao markets are very important to our business, definitely contributing to the phenomenal growth that we have had in the current year alone," he said.

"With the competitive Cebu business climate and the many products that Microsoft has and will be releasing in the near future, we thought it best to have a presence to support our customers and partners," he added.

Microsoft currently has around 2,000 partners all over the country, with some of its Microsoft Gold Certified partners based in Cebu.

coffers while the remaining P6 billion was the share of Philippine Deposit Insurance Corp.

Another major asset sold under his tenure was the real property of Manila Gas Corp., which contributed P574 million to the national government. The government was also able to sell some of its real properties in Japan under his leadership.

Other state assets that are in the pipeline of privatization include Al-Amanah Islamic Bank, the former International School property in Makati City, shares in Maynilad Water Services Corp., and broadcast firms RPN-9 and IBC-13.

"It's not easy selling government assets. One has to be creative to be able to think of ways on how to make the assets attractive to buyers," he admitted, but added that he expected other major assets to be sold within the year.

C&P Homes posts 68% profit jump

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

HOUSING DEVELOPER C&P Homes Inc. said it posted a 68-percent jump in its first-quarter net income to P37 million for P22 million a year ago due to lower costs.

In a disclosure filed with the Philippine Stock Exchange, C&P Homes said the profit growth was mainly due to the decline in interest expenses to P13 million from P21 million last year.

Streamlining measures likewise reduced costs and expenses to P235 million this year from P241 million last year, the company added.

However, net sales were flat at P225 million from last year's P227 million.

Interest income and miscellaneous income grew 7 percent due to an increase in collectibles from installment contracts, better collection efficiency and higher income from administrative fees related to housing.

C&P Homes recently raised its authorized capital stock to P7 billion from P5 billion. The new capital consists of 7 billion common shares with a par value of P1. The capital build-up forms part of the housing firm's capital and debt restructuring program.

It was also aimed at enticing creditors to convert a portion of their claims into equity.

C&P Homes said it was trying to restructure $150 million in floating rate notes. Although the basic terms of the plan have been laid out, certain implementing details were still to be confirmed and finalized.

C&P Homes said it continued to settle some of its obligations through the sale of real estate properties and certain assets. It has also entered into swapping deals and joint-venture arrangements with its business partners to service some operating requirements.

The broader all-shares index was down 1.04 points at 1,526.42.

Advancers led decliners 53 to 48, with 45 stocks unchanged.

The government said the budget surplus grew to P17.6 billion in April from P3.3 billion in the same month last year, thanks to increased revenue collection and reduced expenses. (See story on Page A1.)

"Psychologically, the positive fiscal numbers have been ... in the market's performance," said Harry Liu of Summit Securities.

Top-traded Ayala Land advanced 50 centavos to P14.75 while its parent Ayala Corp. gained P12.50 to P432.50.

PLDT ended down P10 at P2,100. Its unit Piltel gained 20 centavos to P4. AFP

Agents get together to give kids new lease on life

Gift of Life grants free heart surgery to less fortunate children

JOHN WAYNE VILLANUEVA looked as healthy as any other seven-year old boy. But unlike his playmates, he tired easily and had difficulty breathing because he had problems with his heart.

But thanks to the "Gift of Life" program that financed his heart surgery, he now runs around and plays as hard as his friends.

He is one of the growing number of poor Filipino children touched by the "Gift of Life" program supported by the Western Union Foundation.

These children, most of whom have congenital heart problems, were able to get operated on for free largely due to the combined effort of the four local agents of Western Union.

They raised as much funds as they could to support the surgeries, and every dollar they raised was matched by Western Union Foundation.

In the first collection last December, the agents raised $62,000 on their own, bringing the first fund to $124,000, which was enough to cover 62 operations at an average cost of $2,000 each.

The cost is limited to the medicine and the diagnostic procedures because the doctors and the hospitals usually extend their services for free as part of the "Gift of Life" program.

In caring for these sick children with no hope of raising the money on their own, Petnet, EBiz Financial

Services, M. Lhuillier and Universal Storefront Services are no longer competitors, but firm partners.

Western Union Philippines country director Patricia Riingen says it is only in the Philippines where the different agents work together on common projects.

Aside from the Gift of Life, for instance, the agents again got together and pledged $100,000 to help the landslide victims in Guinsaugon, Southern Leyte.

The money will be used to build schools outside the hard-hit areas to encourage relocation to places in the province that are less prone to deadly landslides.

In other countries, the agents work on their own individual programs, which are nevertheless supported by Western Union Foundation.

Beneficiaries

The foundation was attracted to the Gift of Life project first broached by Lorenzo T. Ocampo of Petnet because it is not only the child who benefits from the heart surgery, but the family as well.

"When a child gets sick, everybody gets affected," Riingen says. "The parents do not get to work and the expenses for other children are diverted to the sick child."

"That is why these operations make a real difference in the lives of the family," Riingen adds.

She adds that there is such a sense of fulfillment when the people involved learn that the operations went on smoothly and that the children were well on their way to recovery.

It takes about 30 days for the children to recover fully from their major open-heart surgeries, although they are up and about way before then with huge smiles on their and their family's faces.

The Rotary Club of Makati West, which started the program, takes care of screening the candidates for the free medical services.

The children should be certified as having a life threatening sickness and in dire need of financial support for them to qualify for the "Gift of Life" program.

Riingen says Western Union in the Philippines is exploring the possibility of tapping the Filipino expatriate community in other countries, such as in Singapore, for funds to expand the "Gift of Life" program.

"Basically, we are looking at how Filipinos abroad would be able to help here and give back to the community," Riingen says.

Western Union knows its market abroad intimately since the bulk of its clients are Filipinos working overseas sending part of their money back to their loved ones in the Philippines.

Financial literacy

Western Union estimates that nine of 10 of its transactions involve money coming in to the Philippines, as opposed to going out.

Riingen says another project that Western Union is looking to support is one involving improving financial literacy of the OFWs.

This is to make sure that the hard-earned money of Filipinos overseas are put to good use in the Philippines, rather than squandered.

Western Union realizes that it is vital for Filipinos to be more financially responsible considering that the Philippines is the third biggest receiver of remittances from abroad.

Studies show that as many as 2,700 Filipinos leave to work abroad every day.

Riingen says Western Union participates in the pre-departure seminars organized by the government to help give them an idea of what to expect when they start working abroad.

While that program is being developed, Western Union in the Philippines looks forward to continue being part of the program to give less fortunate Filipinos a new lease on life.

As Samuel and Elaine, John Wayne's parents, say, they are truly indebted to the Gift of Life for saving their son's life.

"I hope that they continue with their program so that they can help more people," Samuel says in Filipino.

Banks given more time to clean up Dosri loans

By Doris C. Dumlao

THE MONETARY BOARD HAS GIVEN BANKS more time to clean up their portfolio of loans and other credit extended to directors, officers and related interests (Dosri), which are not backed by collateral.

The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas said in a statement yesterday that its policy-making body had approved the extension for another year, or up to April 9, 2007, of the transitory provisions of a two-year old circular that tightened the rules and regulations on Dosri.

Under the transitory provisions, sanctions for noncompliance with the Dosri rules shall not apply to outstanding loans, other credit accommodations and guarantees previously not considered as Dosri accounts for two years.

Banks were also allowed not to deduct unsecured Dosri accounts from their capital accounts for two years.

The transitory provisions would have expired last April 9, but the BSP said the deadline was extended to "provide banks with more time within which to manage their portfolio of secured Dosri loans, other credit accommodations and guarantees."

The General Banking Law of 2000 limits banks' Dosri exposure to an amount equivalent to the borrowers' deposits and book value of their paid-in contribution in the bank.

This is as long as unsecured loans and other Dosri credit accommodations and guarantees do not exceed 15 percent of its total loan portfolio or 100 percent of its net worth, whichever is lower.

Previously, the BSP tightened the Dosri guidelines to curb excessive credit exposure that could trigger bank failures.

Specifically, the MB expanded the coverage of Dosri lendings, particularly with regards to "related interests" and likewise imposed stiff sanctions against violators.

One of the sanctions identified by the BSP is the restriction or prohibition on the bank from declaring dividends until the outstanding loans and other credit accommodations had been reduced within the prescribed ceilings.

With the tighter regulations, the BSP wants big borrowers to instead tap the domestic capital market to secure their funding requirements.

GCash and RBAP strengthen mobile banking partnership

Making countryside m-commerce possible (fr. l-r): RBAP-MABS Senior MIS Manager Anthony Petalcorin, Microfinance and Banking Specialist Lyndon Paul Sorensen, Chief of Party John Owens, USAID Office of Economic Development and Governance Head Robert Wuerz, RBAP president (Ret. Gen.) William Hotchkiss III, G-Xchange, Inc. Business Development Head for Government and Financial Institutions Trina Ycasiano, Head for Government and Financial Institutions Gigi Gayoso, Project RBAP consultant Apple Sells, G-Xchange, Inc. President Rizza Maniego-Eala, Globe Telecom Head of Sales and Distribution Joey Mendoza, and RBAP-MABS MIS Specialist Nixon Mahilum.

GCash makes mobile banking history once more! Following the successful rollout of Text-A-Payment, a pioneering mobile micro-finance service that enables the remote payment of monthly loan amortizations, G-Xchange, Inc. (a wholly-owned subsidiary of Globe Telecom) expands its longstanding partnership with the Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines (RBAP) and its USAID-supported Microenterprise Access to Banking Services (MABS) Program, with the implementation of the service's cash-in and cash-out or Palitan Center transactions in select member banks.

In a move recently approved by the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas, RBAP member banks can now be accredited as GCash Palitan Centers. This BSP endorsement has enabled partner rural banks to facilitate domestic money transfers and international remittance transactions through the GCash service platform. This platform also allows them to accept mobile payments for any GCash partner institution, such as utility companies, insurance firms, schools and retail merchants.

The real-time capabilities and transactional mobility of GCash make it an ideal mobile banking channel for rural banks and their clients. This is particularly convenient for micro and small-scale entrepreneurs who no longer have to travel for banking transactions as they can now even pay their bills, buy and sell products and services, and perform cash-in or cash-out transactions at a nearby GCash accredited rural bank. Banks, on the other hand, get to minimize costs and derive additional revenue from GCash driven payment and remittance transactions.

According to G-Xchange, Inc. President, Rizza Maniego-Eala, these new services offered to Rural Banks in the Philippines are further proof of GCash's steadfast commitment to uplifting the Filipino way of life through empowering m-commerce services. "We are working towards making GCash increase its contribution to the greater task of nationbuilding by giving the public greater access to commercial and financial transactions — through the convenience of a simple text message while ensuring security and reliability," states Eala.

B6 BUSINESS RP expects upgrade in rating to 'positive' Government banking on VAT collection

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE PHILIPPINES EXPECTS CREDIT RATING agencies to upgrade their sovereign credit rating on the Philippines to "positive" from "stable" by the last quarter of this year or early next year.

A "positive" outlook means that the Philippine government—currently rated at two notches below investment grade by Fitch, three notches below by Standard & Poor's and four notches below by Moody's—has a big chance of getting a credit rating upgrade in two years.

"As long as there's no fiscal slippage, that's the key (to a positive outlook)," Renato Pizarro, the government's chief investor relations officer, said yesterday after meeting with a visiting mission from S&P.

"All the indicators that are coming out are positive and there are no controversial issues on the political front," he said.

A sovereign credit rating reflects the agencies' view on the ability and willingness of a government to meet its debt obligations in full and on time. Pizarro said it was too soon to expect an immediate revision in sovereign credit rating outlook after this particular visit from S&P, noting the Philippines would still have to establish a trend of good value added tax collections.

"We have to show more resolve on the fiscal sector," he said.

Asked when the Philippines was likely to see a further improvement in debt rating outlook, Pizarro said: "Maybe toward the end of this year or early next year."

He said a revision in the outlook to positive would be inevitable once the government sustains VAT revenue collections for nine months.

He said this would indicate whether the full-year targets would be met.

"In the first few months, our deficit numbers were good. It's a good anchor for saying that probably, we'll be more confident that down the road, we'll meet our fiscal targets. The most critical is the VAT collection," he explained.

16 Mindanao cities improve service delivery, experts say

GENERAL SANTOS CITY—AT LEAST 16 MINDANAO cities under the Transparent and Accountable Governance (TAG) project funded by the Asia Foundation and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) have reported a significant improvement in their delivery of services.

During the second conference held here last week, officials of the TAG cities said they have recorded a notable improvement in their market and terminal operations, business tax administration, health, and procurement systems.

The TAG project implemented by the League of Cities of the Philippines (LCP) aims to promote transparency and accountability through reforms in beneficiary-cities.

It has been going on for the past seven months in the cities of Zamboanga, Ozamiz, Oroquieta, Malaybalay, Koronadal, Tacurong, General Santos, Surigao, Iligan, Samal, Dapitan, Butuan, Dipolog, Panabo, Marawi and Cotabato.

Zamboanga City, for example, posted a 295.03 percent increase in revenues from about P995,000 last year to P29.5 million this year when they implemented reforms.

The procedural reforms undertaken included the reduction in the number of hours for business permits and licensing processing, introduction of a one-stop shop business processing, printing of procedural handbooks and "other client-friendly innovations."

Dapitan, which focused on improving its public market and bus terminal, reported a 27 percent increase in revenue collection.

General Santos, the first of the 16 TAG cities to print a procedural handbook, has reported positive results in its management of the General Santos City Hospital. Aquiles Zorio, PDI Mindanao Bureau

PLEASE ENLIGHTEN ME. WHAT IS A Michelin star chef?

MARIO

Here, Mario, is Part 2 of the May 11 column and the answer to your question.

The first Michelin Guide was a French guide on cars, car maintenance and places where those traveling cross-country can dine and lodge. Initially distributed for free, it released its first edition in 1900.

The guide was the brainchild of André Michelin who, together with his brother, later figured out that nothing given free would be taken seriously. So they decided it must be sold.

The 1926 edition started the "stars" rating to indicate which establishments served fine cuisine. The two and three stars were eventually added in 1930. Thus began the by-now-famous red book, actually a change from the original blue. Green guides exist as well, but these are mainly in France and its regions.

KITCHEN RESCUE

Reggie Aspiras

Twelve

Today there are 12 guides for hotels and restaurants that cover countries such as Benelux, Italy, Germany, Spain and Portugal, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and Ireland, the "Main Cities of Europe," and, as of 2006, New York City, as well as a specific guide to France.

The Michelin guide is an annual publication. To keep its standards, those who review establishments revisit them every 18 months or so. It uses a three-star system for recommending sights—three is "worth the trip"; two, "worth a detour"; one, "interesting."

For restaurants, one star is given to "a very good restaurant in its category," two stars for "excellent cooking, worth a detour" and three stars for "exceptional cuisine, worth a special journey."

The guide's gastronomic ratings have become the most famous and influential in the world. They are taken very seriously by chefs. The title/rating is given only to a very select few. The addition or loss of a star can mean a difference in sales that run in the millions of Euros.

A rated restaurant becomes a food Mecca for gourmands, with reservations made months in advance, if one should even be so lucky to get a booking. Its chef is a culinary demigod.

In the world of haute cuisine, and especially to the French, a rating from Michelin or its rival, the equally prestigious Gault Millau, is equivalent to the chef's worth in gold. A loss of a star or, for the Gault Millau, a point is such a disgrace that, in the case of prominent French chef Bernard Loiseau, the master behind the renowned restaurant Côte d'Or in Saulieu in Burgundy, death was a better option. Rumors continue to fuel debate if it was the Gault Millau or the Michelin that made him opt to end his life.

Linking the regions through food

By Butch Pajarillo
Contributor

IT HAS BECOME A SORT OF ICON for Filipino food lovers. And if the influx of old and new patrons in its branches is an indication of success, Gerry's Grill is definitely on top of the hill.

The joint has come a long way since founder Gerry Apolinario opened the first Gerry's Grill branch on Feb. 14, 1997 on Tomas Morato corner Eugenio Lopez Avenue in Quezon City. Now, eight years after, with 17 branches nationwide, Gerry's Grill still pulsates with excitement, as it continues to polish to perfection the art of good food.

Asked what he thinks of the company's steady success, Gerry's Grill marketing manager Francis R. Villaluz says he believes the restaurant is linking the Philippines through good food.

"What we offer is a good cross-section of the best dishes in the Philippines and if (somebody from) one region can appreciate a dish from another region then, in a way, the food has become instrumental in transcending cultural and ethnic boundaries," he says.

Whatever province of the Philippines one comes from, food lovers will always find at Gerry's a little bit of home that he or she misses. Aside from its continual quest for excellence, this element might be one of the reasons Gerry's decided to cater to Filipinos abroad.

Two branches of the restaurant are scheduled to open in the United States soon. The first is in San Francisco, tentatively scheduled to be inaugurated in December. The second US branch is in Los Angeles, due to open in February next year.

Search continues

Stagnancy is a word that does not exist in the Gerry's Grill vocabulary. Villaluz says Apolinario is always on the lookout for new ways of improving and expanding their product line, deriving inspirations from his trips all over the Philippines and abroad.

In addition to its original best-sellers such as sizzling sisig, beef karekare, crispy pata, inihaw na pusit and lechon kawali, Gerry's Grill has started offering a new line of delectable dishes like Tahong a la Pobre, Spicy Half-shelled Mussels tossed in garlic and oil; Adobong Puso Rice, rice wrapped in banana leaves mixed with chicken-pork adobo; Baked Scallops, baked half-shelled scallops in a special sauce topped with garlic and melted cheese; Steamed Plapla, plapla steamed served with garlic and butter sauce, topped with fresh leeks; Bagnet, crispy fried pork belly served with fresh onions and tomato salad, fish bagoong on the side; Bagoong Rice, plain boiled rice flavored with local fish bagoong and dried tiny shrimps; Crab Rice, dried rice flavored with fresh crabmeat; Veggie Rice, fresh mixed vegetables stir-fried with plain boiled rice.

High standard

At Gerry's Grill product development is just the beginning of a tedious process. The chain maintains a very high standard when it comes to the consistency of the taste and flavors of its dishes. It's no easy feat when you're talking about 120 different items.

Next to great food, it is probably the ambiance that continually draws the crowd to Gerry's. The company believes dining must ultimately and truly be a relaxing experience. The place is inviting and not at all intimidating—a formula that has worked well for them through the years, with Gerry's going beyond its expected target market of barkadas unwinding after a hard day's work to families sharing quality time over lunch or dinner.

Gerry's Grill's local branches are on Tomas Morato, QC; Bicutan, Parañaque; Alabang; Jupiter Street, Makati; Glorietta, Makati; Insular Life Building, Makati; Libis, QC; Blue Wave, Manila; Malate, Manila; Marikina; Subic; Baguio; Lucena; Greenhills, San Juan; Batangas; Pampanga; and Cebu. TARTE au Citron

SAUTEED King Scallop

Icons

A total of 11 stars twinkled in Singapore. Of the 11, I had the privilege of twinkling with three, labeled "Iconic Chef" at the World Gourmet Summit, three-star Michelin chef Philippe Legendre of Le Cinq, Four Seasons' Georges V in Paris, and one-star Michelin chef Kevin Thornton of Thornton's Restaurant in Ireland. Their restaurants are a must-try, at least once in your life... I had the chance to attend their workshops, watch them in action, learn from them, as well as feast on their creations.

Legendre's menu—Dublin Bay Prawns with Coriander Fricassee, Old Parmesan Cheese Lasagna; Pigeon with Date Puree and Tajine of Vegetables; Creamy Chocolate Mid-Bitter with Cocoa Sorbet—mirrored his very being. He calls his style typically French but with many influences from places he has been, people who inspire him and ingredients at season's prime—and he brings out the best in them.

The playful and artistic Irishman Thornton whipped up Sauteed King Scallop, Sugar Snap Peas, Squid Ink Sauce; Magret of Duck Glazed with Honey and Pistachios, Braised Red Cabbage, Jasmine Sauce; Tarte au Citron.

His food was a picture-perfect image of him; his plates hand-painted with dried fruit and vegetable powders accentuated with gold and silver dust. Thornton's cuisine so prominently shows his passions for life, art, photography, for all things whimsical and experimental.

Cooking is truly about leaving a piece of one's self in his food, the food becoming him and he his food. The master and his work can never be divided, never separated. I recall very few occasions where I actually take bird bites. This time around I caught myself doing just that. I so desired for the dining experience to go on, if I had it my way, forever!

Simply put, dining with such culinary greats is all about the experience, the flavors and the subtle sensations. Their cuisine seems to be just right all of the time. Not one flavor overpowering the other, not one ingredient out of place, never quite whole without the other.

It is a symphony at play, in total unison, creating such mouth-watering moments that I shall carry on in palatal memory for a lifetime.

With an appetite decadently satisfied, I then sat down and listened to gustatory wisdom...

THEY COME BEAUTIFULLY wrapped—first in white paper, then in thin and transparent Japanese paper, expertly folded at the ends. Sometimes multicolored cutout wrappers that look like paper laces are used.

STEP BY STEP

This melt-in-your-mouth pastry coated in sugar is soft, creamy, smooth and rich in taste. Made only from fresh carabao's milk and sugar, Pastillas de Leche is simply San Miguel, Bulacan's pride.

Pastillas-making has been a cottage industry in San Miguel for something like 135 years, according to the town's Mayor Edmundo "Pop" Buencamino, who is on his first term.

"San Miguel's pastillas-making has been handed down from generations to generations," he said. "It has been the town's source of livelihood, sending to college many students and [financing the building of] better homes, and keeping big bakeshops in Manila steadily supplied."

The recent first-ever Pastillas Festival in the province reassured the townsfolk that their products were well accepted and patronized not only in the country, but also internationally, a favorite pasalubong among balikbayans.

Buencamino said San Miguel's pastillas was well-received when it was brought to last year's Pistang Bulacan in Hilton Paradise Hotel, Las Vegas, Nevada.

"We brought about 17 luggages of pastillas and they were all sold out," Buencamino proudly reported. In September, San Miguel's pastillas will grace the international festival at Los Angeles Convention Center.

ROLL strips on sugar.

WRAP pastillas in oslo paper and cover with Japanese paper.

YOU may also transfer mixture into a plastic container.

Secret

The secret to the pastillas is the freshness of the carabao's milk, which is pasteurized immediately upon delivery from individual farmers in Bulacan.

Pastillas-making can be very tedious. "You need to get the freshest milk, cooking over a slow fire and stirring constantly. It takes hours to solidify," Buencamino said.

Milk and sugar are boiled together until thickened, then cooled and formed by hand into little mini-logs that are often rolled in more granulated sugar before they are individually packed in paper or cellophane. Some commercially made pastillas take a "shortcut" by adding condensed milk. Cooking is faster but the result is extra sweet.

The pastillas' shelf life is 12-15 days at room temperature and two to three weeks when refrigerated.

Here, Buencamino demonstrates how to make Pastillas de Leche in large volume.

Ingredients:

Fresh carabao's milk
Granulated white sugar
Additional granulated sugar for coating
Lemon juice

For suggestions, e-mail the author at vbaga@inquirer.com.ph

PASTILLAS de Leche of San Miguel, Bulacan

MIX together sugar, lemon juice and fresh carabao's milk. Then, in a large cooking vat (kawa) or deep saucepan, pour the milk-sugar mixture.

COOK mixture over medium heat, constantly stirring for an hour. Do not leave the mixture unattended because it scorches fast.

ALLOW mixture to rest and cool. Cook for a half hour more or until the mixture forms a solid mass. Remove from fire and transfer to a dry clean bowl to cool.

WHEN mixture is cool, form into balls or logs according to your desired size.

ILOILO'S

by a young chefWhile confident of her Continental cuisine know-how, she had to study the food of her province to do it correctly

PAULINE Gorriceta-Basusing, Ilonggo chef

PAULINE GORRICETA-BASUSING was in her white chef's uniform as she welcomed guests to the opening of "Man-amit!" the Ilonggo food festival at the Mandarin Oriental Manila. A young Filipino chef cooking her hometown cuisine? Years ago, it would have been unlikely.

Aspiring chefs mostly study Continental cuisine, even other Asian cooking, but never our own.

Pauline, herself, is an example, attending the best schools—Culinary Institute of America, New School of New York and the Institute of Culinary Education (formerly Peter Kump's). Leaning toward Italian cooking, she opened Al Dente Ristorante Italiano in Iloilo. She also manages a seafood restaurant, a bistro and a catering service in the city.

But while confident of her Continental cuisine know-how, she felt she had to study the food of her province just to be sure she would do it correctly for this festival. Her mother, a veteran of the restaurant business (managing fast-food joints called Try Me), taught her how to go about it.

Learning from masters

The advice was to learn from the masters. For batchoy, it was the old man (she doesn't know his name) who prepared the dish daily at Deco. She went to the market at four in the morning. Deco is one of the stalls famous for the signature Iloilo soup dish with slices of pork and innards and thin noodles. She was told to ask the man casually about the process, for what commercial cook would give out secrets?

Pauline says among the casually shared secrets is using Marca Pating, a monosodium glutamate (MSG) sold at the La Española grocery. She mentions the places as if I know them. But yes, I had been to Iloilo and had eaten at Deco and Ted's, premier batchoy providers. I will get to that grocery some day. As the hotel would not let her use MSG, she said they made good beef stock.

The other secret to the batchoy is guinamos (fermented fish) in a katsa bag swirled about to give added flavor.

From the batchoy table, we took a tour of the food as she annotated. It was an insight as well on hotel requirements in presenting local cooking.

She pointed out the pinamalhan, fish cooked in vinegar and tomatoes, the Iloilo paksiw. It's supposed to be bangus, she said, but the hotel wanted it done with salmon. Must have something to do with the bones.

Surprised

We laughed at how the expat chefs were surprised that she cooked the linusgusan na lukon (steamed prawns) in 7-Up. They do have to learn that the "uncola" does make whatever you cook with it (shrimps, mussels, barbecue) sweeter.

A big steamer contained fresh oysters. Pauline says oysters are steamed rather than boiled in Iloilo. There were fresh scallops as well. Her food styling lessons came to the fore as she added green mango shreds on top to dress up this essentially plain but really wonderful shellfish.

When we talked of adobo, she included a cooking lesson to point out how different they did it in Iloilo. It starts with sautéing garlic, onion and meat. Next, bay leaf, peppercorn, achuete (for color) and, most important, sinamak, the local vinegar, are added. A little sugar tempers the vinegar and finishes the dish.

Sinamak is an integral part of eating in Iloilo. Aside from flavoring food in the cooking, it's a must-dip that chicken inasal (coal-roasted) can't do without. This coconut vinegar is mixed in with garlic, siling labuyo, peppercorn and langkawas (ginger, galangal) that is so potent in both flavor and smell that it isn't allowed aboard an airplane. A huge sign at the Iloilo airport says so.

Another dish she had to learn was the tinu-om, chicken wrapped in banana leaves then steamed in its own juice. The traditional way of cooking is inside a big bamboo stalk making sure the banana leaf is tied tightly so the juices don't escape.

She showed diners the old way by placing a sample beside the chaffing dish containing the tinu-om. When she was testing this dish, some told her to add more flavors or to make it soupier. But she relied on the version of a farmer who worked for her father.

In demand

The dish that couldn't be replenished fast enough was the grilled managat. It's a mangrove fish, a jack snapper. The brackish water explains its delicious flavor and texture—soft, white and fatty flesh.

The foods on the appetizer buffet were really merienda. There were panara (empanada) of mongo sprouts and lumpiang ubod. Crispy crablets were present probably because they are so identified with Ilonggo cooking.

Finally the dessert table. It had the most interesting offerings even if you didn't have a sweet tooth. Pauline pointed to the bae-bae, pinipig cooked in coconut milk, which she said she learned from specialists in Iloilo. She promised she wouldn't cook it for business.

It was wonderful to see and eat once more the papaya candy, thin slices of green papaya processed in sugar then formed into petals with creamy yema in them. Pauline said the candy was from Passi, Iloilo, that had many sugar mills. Hence, many sweets were invented there.

There were colorful bacayo (candied coconut strips) and small bi-bingka pieces that contained strips of young coconut. Being passed around on the first day was a basket filled with pieces of butterscotch, yemas and empanaditas. A taste of each led to a second helping to take home.

Every day, Pauline works the room, many guests are friends from college and some, Ilonggos who have settled here. Anyone who goes to the Captain's Bar is invited to sample Iloilo cooking.

She smiled as she related how a group of Swedes finished off their bowl of batchoy. But a Filipino with a foreign guest opted for Continental food. Sad, Pauline said, how our own people would not even try the food.

Manamit! Iloilo Food Festival is on every lunch until May 19 at the Captain's Bar, Mandarin Oriental Manila, Makati City.

HOROSCOPE

BY FRANCIS DRAKE

YOU BORN TODAY: You're conscientious, reliable and serious about what you do. You're traditional, yet you have modern, cutting-edge ideas. Justice matters to you. You're idealistic, yet practical. You like to share your opinions. You're loyal to family, and in your later years, you're keen to establish a secure base for your loved ones. Work hard to build or construct something.
Birthdate of: John Paul II, religious leader; Perry Como, crooner; Chow Yun-Fat, actor.

ARJES (March 21 to April 19): You feel passionately about money issues today, or perhaps a particular possession that you own. You're not really in the mood to share. You're going to defend your turf!

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): Your ability to research or ferret out answers to questions is wonderful today. There is nothing that is too much trouble. You will pick up every rock and look under it.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): If you have any disputes with others today, they had better look out! You strongly identify with your own point of view today. (And you're prepared to let anyone else know.)

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): Conversations with friends or perhaps members of groups are very heated and intense today. People (including you) are discussing issues that they really believe in.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): Be diplomatic with bosses and parents today. You identify so strongly with your ideas that you might appear threatening to others! It's OK to believe what you believe, but do it graciously.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): Heated arguments about politics or religion are possible today. That's because people identify with their beliefs. (Note: Since most people were not reasoned into their beliefs, they cannot be reasoned out of them.)

KANINA, MAY BASURA SA TAPAT NAMIN. PINULOT KO AT TINAPON SA BASURAHAN.

TEA-CURED salmon with pickled ginger and eschallot (green onion) dressing

The art of good living, Aussie-style home

By Michaela Fenix

WINES, ESPECIALLY WHEN THEY are good, make for livelier company.

And so the small dinner party at the residence of the Australian ambassador Tony Hely, hosted by Alan Morrel, senior trade commissioner, had the walls resounding with talk and laughter from the moment cocktails were served.

The wines featured that evening were from Western Australia, in the favored area known as Margaret River. Perth, the capital, should be mentioned to give some geographic perspective.

Emma O'Reilly represented a winery with the playful name of Swings and Roundabouts. The name contrasts with the formal winery names of the Old World (read: French and Italian).

Mike Edwards represented his company, Edwards Wines, where he is not only owner but also winemaker.

All their wines are available locally at the Wine Depot.

We were all greeted with a cool light Semillon Sauvignon Blanc '05 from Swings and Roundabouts. That was served with a duck and chicken liver parfait with a covering of port wine jelly, both complementing each other.

That was the first offering from chefs Carlos and Anton Miguel, two old hands at blending food with wine. The Miguel brothers studied culinary arts in Australia but have since settled in their home country to cook for small parties.

Before dinner was served, a bit of entertainment involved the didgeridoo played by a foremost musical artist, Troy Bennell. The traditional musical instrument, made from the bark of a tree and decorated with aboriginal art, was able to approximate any sound or tone Bennell wanted.

After setting the Australian mood with didgeridoo music and some works of Australian artists around the cocktail area, an amuse bouche of lobster tortellini was served. Appetizer was tea-cured salmon with pickled ginger and eschallot

According to Edwards, sauvignon blanc is the new chardonnay. The winemaker says the grapes for this wine shouldn't be too ripe.

A fish dish came next, barramundi with green harissa and a coriander salad. It was paired with, from Swings and Roundabouts, Kiss Chasey Chardonnay Semillon Sauvignon Blanc '05. Kiss Chasey, it was explained, was a children's game. The combination of three grape varieties made the name long but produced a citrus apple flavor.

O'Reilly says there is just a bit of chardonnay to this mix and the blending of semillon and sauvignon blanc is characteristic of Margaret River wines.

Braised lamb shank with minted pea risotto was not as heavy as one thought it would be. Maybe the wine, an Edwards Cabernet Sauvignon '04, helped. It was elegant and quite delicate rather than robust.

As is their style, the Miguel brothers informed diners about every course. They said the strawberry and mascarpone Pavlova was straight from the recipe book because it never failed them. It was a great dessert to finish our cabernet sauvignon, as well.

The evening was an experience in the art of good living, indeed. Culinary, winemaking, visual and musical arts were well-represented.

Clean and green fiestas

By Linda B. Bolido

F IESTAS ARE held all year round throughout the Philippines.

But such events not only mean food, merrymaking and revelry but also waste—a lot of it, in fact—the way they are traditionally celebrated. From food packaging to banderitas to firecrackers, fiestas mean a lot of trash to be dealt with the morning after. They also use up a lot of water and electric ity and can cause severe strain on the environment.

The Ecological Waste Coalition of the Philippines (Ecowaste Coalition) says a mountain of trash need not be the inevitable consequence of fiestas. It offers tips on zero-waste and nonpolluting celebration.

For instance, instead of plastic and other inorganic materials for decoration, communities can use things that can be reused, recycled or composted like locally available biodegradable materials.

Plants and other greenery are more eco-friendly than plastic streamers, bunting or balloons. At the end of the festivities, decorations should be removed, washed and stored so they can be reused.

Recycling stations may be put up where people can bring their trash for sorting. To the many people given responsibility for fiesta arrangements, organizers should add "ecowaste patrols" that will assist in the ecological management of discards.

Food concessionaires and vendors should be encouraged to use reusable or biodegradable alternatives like banana leaves, instead of disposable containers and utensils.

In processions, candles which do not yield excessive soot and are not likely to release toxic substances like lead should be used. Better yet, reduce the need for candles by holding the procession in daylight. The use of firecrackers or pyrotechnics that adversely affect air quality should be minimized.

The menu should be carefully planned. Food should only be sufficient for expected guests. Meals and drinks should be served in reusable containers.

Condiments should be bought in bulk and stored in reusable bottles, shakers or dispensers. Cloth napkins that can be washed and used again are better than paper.

Instead of soda, offer water or healthy drinks like tanglad, buko with pandan, or salabat with calamansi.

THE CONSUMER

Excess food should be shared with neighbors and people in need of adequate and nutritious food.

Discarded food should be saved for animal consumption or composting. Waste should be segregated and recycled. Discarded items should not be mixed, dumped or burned.

For more information, contact the Ecowaste Coalition at 9290376 or e-mail, Manny Calanzo at manny.gala@no-burn.org

Feedback

Reader Peachie Filarca wants to commend SC Johnson & Son for superb customer service. She said she bought a single Glade Magic Gel Decor 150g Cool Lime and kept it in storage. But, when it was time to use it, she found the container empty.

She called the company only wanting to inform them of the problem. The company's Quality Assurance Department readily replaced the item not just with one but two pieces. Commendable indeed!

Meanwhile, Grover C. Guillermo, manager of the SM North Edsa branch, sent a letter of apology to reader Grace V. Ramoy for the rude behavior of two department store employees. Guillermo assured Ramoy the employees had been warned that they faced disciplinary action if the incident was repeated.

Ramoy complained that her sister was laughed at and made fun of by the employees. She said "this is the second time my sister experienced this from SM Department Store's staff." She added that her sister had a heart problem and she was concerned that such rudeness could be too stressful as to endanger her health.

PHILIPPINE MARKETING ASSOCIATION

World Class Marketing Innovations

It is clear today that innovation is the rising dictator over the world of tomorrow and as a crucial principle, it must spread from the marketing department into the boardroom. The Philippine Marketing Association's 37th National Marketing Conference (NMC) highlights innovation as a driver of business growth and an ideology that must be embraced by leaders of local industries. It is not only a means by which to get ahead but for some, it means survival in a fiercely competitive environment.

More than instilling and cultivating a progressive mindset that is renewed in its approach of innovation, the conference theme, All That Jazz: World-Class Innovations, shares a truly new and unique experience that cannot be missed. Enter a world of a never-before-seen production that flaunts the soulful music of a live jazz band, the internationally-acclaimed artistry of a Filipino idol, the vibrancy of larger than life works of art, exclusive opportunities to test drive the world's dynamic luxury cars and all that jazz.

Marking a milestone in Philippine Marketing Association history, the 37th National Marketing Conference offers an experience that breaks the boundaries of the traditional learning environment and its innovations demonstrate creativity that is both Filipino and world-class. Here is a jumpstart of local ingenuity and global recognition going hand and hand, let's look forward to a future that continues to combine both with innovation in the driver's seat.

New music, new instruments

It's like a good old song played hundreds of times. The ideas behind marketing have played on and on in our minds for as long as we can remember. But generations are now in flux, times are changing and so must our business approach. It's time to play the good old songs in a new mix.

Jos Ortega, chair of the National Marketing Conference (NMC) and CEO of BrandLab has crafted a remix of an old song. According to him, the only way to keep up with this surge of life redefined is, in turn, rethinking the way we understand our consumers and their needs. He identifies progressive marketing trends that will lead the way to stronger Filipino businesses going global. He has designed the NMC and its avant-garde theme, "All That Jazz: World-Class Innovations" in a way that will cultivate and instill fresh marketing developments into the local mindset.

Innovation is the first step to stirring the marketing movement. It is no longer a matter of just research and development nor is it a luxury by which market leaders get even further ahead, innovation is today the fundamental driver of business growth. Innovation begins in the boardroom. One of this year's NMC speakers Rene Almendras, president of Cebu Holdings Inc and vice president/head of operation transformation for Ayala Land will be expounding on "The Art of Innovation", showing how a unique vision starts with open-minded leaders and corporate transformation from the inside out.

Because creativity is so integral to innovation, companies must break down traditional barriers and introduce new facilities to cultivate ingenuity. Leaders should allow ideas to grow because while it may appear unsightly as it sprouts, it may blossom quite beautifully.

Originality needs to be embraced by business leaders and as a prime example the NMC brings in Butch Jimenez, SVP-Retail Business Group, Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company, speaking on "Building a Culture of Innovation". Jimenez will discuss changing the standard, motivating the employees and breaking down the corporate hierarchies that impair many companies today.

Another NMC guest, head of marketing Sandeep Khanna, hails from a company that has utilized innovation to dominate the mobile communications industry not only in the Philippines but also on a global scale. He will share the insights behind Nokia "Maintaining Market Leadership through Product Innovations" and highlight how important creativity is for a market that constantly evolves.

Stabilizing the romanticism of new ideas, Lorenzo Tan, president and CEO of Sun Life of Canada, makes innovation accountable. At the end of the day, it is the ROI that keeps a company going and Tan promotes "Driving Innovations with Fiscal Soundness" to ensure a practical side to an artistic vision. Furthering the idea of accountable creativity is Paul Roebuck, whose agency, BBDO Guerrero Ortega, was recognized as the most creative ad agency in the Philippines by Campaign Brief Asia. He will highlight the importance of demonstrating strategic focus on delivering market results amidst winning awards.

In discussing marketing trends, ideas work best when presented from the worldview of the consumers. NMC presents "New Research Techniques in an Innovative Environment" with managing partner of Good Thinking, Issa Baron. Although most techniques have been tried and tested this age requires new methods that are aligned with modern day problems.

Beyond traditional marketing, innovations are playing a major role in corporate social responsibility. Alexandra Prieto-Romualdez of the Philippine Daily Inquirer will be discussing the value of partnerships that benefit the community. Community building then is not an option for spare time and funds but is a central part of a company's brand and business plan.

Finally, there is the evolving role of brands beyond just a marketing tool. Brand building is the force behind Filipino companies making it international. With this, Martin Roll, president of VentureRepublic, a strategic advisor on branding excellence, will expound on "Asian Brand Strategy: A New Boardroom Paradigm." This means elevating discussions on the brand from the marketing department to the board level as it drives the whole company.

In the same way, Joerg Breuer, president of BMW Philippines, delves into "The Brand as the Central Operating Principle" and stresses that every company decision must be driven by the values of the brand. From design to employees, from sales to engineering, its vision should be clearly manifested.

In addition, the NMC will feature Abbott Philippines, a pharmaceutical industry leader, directed by a leader who is also the brand pioneer, Edwin Feist. As president of Abbott Philippines and regional director for Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, Feist pilots the creative process of brand building, emphasizing that innovation starts in the boardroom. Moreover, Johnlu Koa of French Baker demonstrates the importance of making day-to-day decisions based on a precise and purposeful vision. Professor JJ Roces of the Asian Institute of Management moderates the creativity discussions with Ariel Manuel of Lolodad's, Ed Calma of Lor Calma Designs and Rajo Laurel of House of Laurel. Lastly, Audie Gemora of Stages Productions will demonstrate how to dramatically increase your batting average in the boardroom when selling your ideas.

Messages

Warmest felicitations to the organizers, participants and guests in the 37th National Marketing Conference of the Philippine Marketing Association.

Our Government welcomes the holding of this conference with the theme, "ALL THAT JAZZ: World-Class Innovations." We support the further improvement of the already impressive skills of our marketing practitioners. We are confident that this event on creativity and innovation will raise the standards of the Philippine marketing industry, thereby contributing to a more robust economy.

Congratulations to the PMA for its more than five decades of promoting marketing as a profession guided by the principles of ethics and corporate citizenship and social responsibility. May you continue to be government's invaluable partner in working for the welfare of the consuming public, promoting free enterprise and spurring economic growth.

I wish you all the success of your conference. More power and mabuhay to our Filipino marketing professionals!

Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo
President
Republic of the Philippines

Satellites, computers, wireless communications, digital technology have compressed geography so that virtually anybody, anywhere can only be a fingertip away on a cell phone.

And because even the latest technology can now be accessible anywhere, consumer lifestyles have changed in a way we used to imagine only in the movies. As a result, we are confronted by an even more competitive global business environment where only the finest, the most prepared and innovative can expect to survive.

That is why the association chose for its theme "Move Up to World-class. Kaya Natin."

World-class defines a clear performance standard which is exacting, demanding and stringent. It is the performance standard local marketers must aim for to build a competitive business. And Filipino marketers have the capability to compete on this standard as demonstrated by Globe, San Miguel Corporation, Jollibee, PLDT, just to name a few.

The association is determined to inculcate this mindset among its membership and marketing practitioners in general, through programs throughout the year that will inspire, stimulate and nourish a world-class attitude and standard for marketing.

"World-class innovations... and All that Jazz" is the association's showcase presentation of a world-class program, world-class resource persons, and world-class staging.

We take great pride in hosting a world-class National Marketing Conference. Enjoy it!

PHILIPPINE MARKETING ASSOCIATION

All that Jazz: World-Class Innovations is about empowering local businesses to cross the threshold of international industries. More than driving motivation in order to raise the bar this theme means imparting knowledge and providing practical tools that can be applied in the workplace. The 37th National Marketing Conference is truly an innovation in itself as it transforms conventional learning environments and revamps the ways in which information is presented.

Many of the distinguished companies in the NMC line-up are led by Filipinos who are at the forefront of business growth and innovation. There is no doubt that local industry leaders today must not only follow this lead but shift into the role of global trendsetter. There is pride in being Filipino and this world-class conference is a manifestation of what we can accomplish when innovation is at work.

I would like to extend my sincerest thanks and appreciation to the NMC Committee for their hard work and dedication. I am so proud to be a part of an event that can activate a business revolution towards international recognition. Let us show the world the creativity and passion that are uniquely Filipino!

Roger Enrico, the former chairman of Pepsico once said, "Beware of the tyranny of making small changes to small things. Rather, make big changes to big things."

This has inspired the organizing committee to take this bold step in creating a truly innovative marketing conference.

"All That Jazz" is all about improvisation. And all our efforts were geared towards delivering that unique brand story for the conference.

The great business innovators from Ayala Land, BMW, Nokia, PLDT, Philippine Daily Inquirer, Sun Life of Canada, Abbott, BBDO Guerrero Ortega, French Baker, VentureRepublic, Good Thinking and the Asian Institute of Management, will open windows of insights to inspire all delegates.

Creative geniuses from Lolodad's, Lor Calma Design, House of Laurel and Stages Productions will provide unusual stimuli to marketing theories.

Imagine a conference where the speakers are introduced by a live jazz band. And as an encore, the best jazz vocalist in the world.

Imagine a conference where all your senses will be tickled. Take the ultimate driving machine for a test drive. Feast your eyes on Impressionist paintings. Experiment with the latest mobile phones. Test your audio intelligence. Take unique photographs.

And all that jazz...

The association is determined to inculcate this mindset among its membership and the marketing practitioners in general, through programs throughout the year that will inspire, stimulate, and nourish a world-class attitude and way of doing marketing!

"World-class" defines a clear performance standard which will enable local marketers to level the playing field with the global players. It is an exacting, demanding, and strict criterion.

This is a bold aspiration which the logo reflects with the use of big, bold and strong letters.

"Can Filipino-owned marketing companies measure up to world-class standards?"

The answer, proudly, is "Of course! Jollibee, Globe Telecoms, PLDT and Smart, Ayala Corporation, San Miguel Corporation, URC Corporation are world-class Filipino companies, just to name a few."

As these and other Filipino-owned companies have shown the world, Kaya Natin!

And the theme captures this spirit, with confidence, by integrating the statement in the logo!

At Sarasota, discover the privileges of living close to nature in a Mediterranean-style resort setting inspired by Lake Las Vegas. Choose from an executive studio, 1-bedroom or 2-bedroom home, with wide windows and balconies.

The elegant, earth-toned residential buildings are no more than 9 stories high, so air can flow freely. Each building boasts its own lobby and ample basement parking. Aside from a guarded entrance gate, a tree-lined perimeter fence encloses the entire community. The interior roads are wide and made safe for children.

And the homes are clustered around the play amenities, making it easy for neighbors to get together at the lap pool, putting green, fitness station or tennis court. Or at the sitting area and the aviary with benches. Children, too, will enjoy hours of fun in their own pool and play areas.
